GOAT WANTED.

For Mascot for the U.S. Battleship Connecticut.

New York, Nov. 29 .- There is a fine New York. Nov. 29.—There is a fine chance for any healthy young gost that desires to enlist in the United States navy. The sailors on the U.S. S. Connecticut, flagship of Rear Ad-miral Evans, which will lead the great battleship fleet on its journey to the Pacific, are looking for a mascot in the shape of a goat. Up to 10 days ago the Connecticut possessed a goat, a fine animal which answered to the name of Nutmer, an appellation given a fine animal which answered to the name of Nutrney, an appellation given him in honor of the state from which the great battleship takes its name. But Nutmeg is no more, and the jack tars are seeking another to take his place before the ship sails for the Pa-caffe. The taking off of Nutmeg was a tragedy. The great ship was being put in order for the long cruise. Among other work that was done was the painting of the great funnels. They had been scraped clean of old paint and great tubs of red paint had been mixed for the first coat to be hald on the smokestacks. Now Nutmeg was of an inquiring mind and he investigated the smokestacks. Now Nuitmeg was of an inquiring mind and he investigated the paint. It looked good to him and he took a big swallow out of the nearest tub. That was the beginning of the end of Nutmeg. Twenty minutes later the Connectical was without a goat. Next day Nutmeg had a funeral befitting a rear admiral. Since then the sallors have been looking for another goat, but so far without success.
