and the state of the second A Little Bonnet.

10

There is a little bennet, I see it about town, And a little feather on it That tosses up and down.

· 2 ... 11

Beneath that little bonnet Are two such jet black eyes-Of thou cosy little bonnet-Lord: 1'll waste myself in sight.

And what wonder' see it moving Adown the crowded street, The little feather bowing o'er it, Nodding to the fuiry foot.

Proudly goowthe little bonnet, Proudly trip the little feet, And laughingly her eyes beam out On every thing she moot.

Ho! clear the way, false curls, With your faded beauts tricks! Ho! clear the way, ye suckers Of the while nobe of your sticks!

Ho: smokers of Havannas. Stop that puffing re that eve Puts a stopper ou your fire

With its liquid brilliancy. Proudly goes the little bonnet

Proudly steps the little feet, And inughingly the eyes beam out On everything they meet.

KEEPING UP APPEARANCES.

BY ALFRED CROWQUILL.

The keeping up of appearances is a disease not peculiar to one individual or one class. All world is always trying to keep up appearances. It is the means by which everybody, and, more curious still, are self-deceivers.

When any unfortunate individual fails in the attempt to keep up appearances, all the rest of the world flies at him and tears him piecemeal. purpose, and a court solely appropriated to try such fools; and there placed in confinement, and invited all the highest with him. After some short trial at evasion, he ancient unner the source of t that he may not have the opportunity of again disgracing the world by failing in his attempt to keep up appearances; nine-tenths of his judges and detractors all the while trembling on the verge of the same destructive fall; yet they smile on as if in the greatest state of security, lavishing their means with troubled souls, hecause they must keep up appearances. The world is always straining and over-reach-

Every one wishes to be thought something more than he or she really is. you see the maid of all work, or family drudge, hunger for her holiday; and when it arrives, herself to death uy wandering through the streets in her best things-many degrees too fine-with a veil and a boa which she must put in her pocket before she returns home; merely for the fleeting vanity of being taken for some-body who did not know the shape of a mop or a scrubbing brush.

Many a man who is obliged to keep up appearances by dressing well—which is a very er-pensive part of the delusion—must cut down his expenses in other quarters; consequently his last. his coat gains in texture and out. To have his boots and hat always in an undeniable state, he must put up with a second floor back; and if insane enough to indulye in a taglioni with velret facings and a Hama shawl, suppore must be represented by hard biscuits.

The chesp locality in which this kind of single appearance lives is of very little consequence it, from his nervous apprehension of being seen by the world that really cares nothing about bin, are amusing and droll.
