A POLISH LADY BROUGHT THE OFFICIAL WHIPPING IN PUBLIC OF ALEXANDRA KOSOWITZ—THE PENALTY OF SYMPATHY WITH REBELS.

At a gathering of Poles in the little village of Karszt, on the Southern Niseman, on the 29th of July last, when all thought themselves secure from the information of any of the numerous spies who kept the Russian officials informed of the malcontents among them, Alexandra Kosowitza, son of a former noble Polish family, was killed in the recent troubles in Warsaw, expressed her sympathy with the unfortunate whom Russian severity had murdered or sent into exile. The meeting was a purely social one, and none dreamed that anything said there would reach the ears of spies, for all present were known to be Poles and firm haters of the harsh rule under which they then lived. Still, as it always is in these patriotic assemblies, as a father's love deplored his death, expressed her sympathy with rebels, and her detestation of her oppressors, she was cautioned lest her loud tones should enable people at the window to hear her. With a hasty glance, as though to read in the faces of those about her who should betray her, the young lady ceased her exhortations and related her alienation. At half-past six o'clock came the latest hour of Polish alarm—the coming of separated, and Alexandra Kosowitza, accompanied by her fiancée, Julian Temensky, went to her home.

If, in passing from the house of the gathering, she had been more observant, Alexandra would have seen the maliciously triumphant glances cast after her by Catherine Mordzoff, a woman of about thirty-five years, a Pole by birth, a sympathizer with the unhappy countrymen whenever her own passion was not concerned, and, from the subsequent proceedings, it seems that in this case she had been superseded in the affections of the young Dr. Temensky, by the more resolute and younger Alexandra Kosowitza.

The following day shortly after rising Alexandra was seized in her own home, a short distance from Karszt, by two Cossacks of the guard at the garrison, and taken before the petty judge.

The young lady of nineteen, handsome and trembling, produced no feeling of alarm. Having at first denigrated her offense, she was reprimanded by Catharine Mordzoff, and then acknowledged her offense. In passing sentence the petty judge said that her seditions utterances might have warranted him in sending her before a higher tribunal, where the penalty would be death; but, in view of her youth and contrition, he struck off the death sentence and gave the thirty-five lashes of the knout. Alas! bestricken with shame and terror, the girl was led away to be prepared for punishment, for in Russia all sentences, save that of death, are carried out immediately after they have been pronounced.

Word having been sent to the officer commanding the troops, a guard of two hundred men was ordered into the garrison square, and the executioner of the troops was called up to the scaffold to perform the duty of his office. A half-an-hour after the sentence had been given the troops had been formed in a hollow square, in the centre of which had been placed a scaffold, standing on four legs, the top of which was an inclined plane. Beside this stood the executioner, having in his hand the knout. This weapon consists of a stick, or handle, two feet long, with a half-fourth-eighth of soft leather to the end of which is attached by a loop a plait of raw hide two inches wide and two feet long. In the hand of an experienced man the piece of rawhide can be made to cut like a knife.

As the executioner stood facing the scaffold, Alexandra Kosowitza was brought to him by her guard, and in a few moments everything was removed to her head, despite her almost frantic efforts to be freed from the shambles. She pleaded she was bent on the plane, her hands strapped to the two upper corners and her ankles secured at the feet of the structure. One of the executioner's assistants held her head, and the petty judge gave the order for whipping to commence. Twirling the long lash in the air, the executioner stepped suddenly forward, and with a single blow the thong fell on the back of the sobbing girl, cutting a livid streak from her right shoulder to her waist. A terrible tremor passed over her, and a quick, low cry escaped her lips, but it was the only sound she uttered and were it not for the blow, which she commenced to howl, it might have seemed that the whipping was being done on the naked body of a corpse. When the last lash had been given the young lady was unfastened, and, with her clothing rudely thrown over her, he was taken to prison, and there, after hanking the judge for his mercy, according to the necessary formula, she was delivered over to her friends. She was delivered over to her friends, who contained the secret of the "Gazette of Vilna" contained this information: "The Polish criminal, Alexandra Kosowitza, daughter of the rebel Peter Kosowitza, who was knouted for seditions utterances on the 29th of July at Karszt, while submitting her accusations to medical treatment, in the house of the physician Kemenesky, stole a vial of prussic acid, with which she ended her days."
