In Woman's World.

Some housekeepers have their carpets wiped off while on the floor with a cloth wrung out of warm water with which a little ammonia has been mixed. The water must be changed often. The colors of a light Axminster or any other heavy pile carpet will brighten wonderfully after this treatment. One housekeeper has all her heavy carpets scrubbed on the floor, with plenty of soap and warm water.

An ink spot was removed from a light colored Axminster carpet by the application of common sand soap with a soft cloth wrung out of warm water.

Beauty.

Beauty is nature finding its perfect outline, as a dahlia spontaneously assumes the dress of its unique being. We should all have been beautiful if our ancestors had kept the laws of heaven all must be beautiful; for our spiritual body must be the visibility of the heart and mind, and the soul's biography in perfect definition. The rush of health will banish all efface and deformed substances, including grief, sin, and death—Clarence Lathbury, in "The Being With the Turned Face."

Housekeeping in Venice.

Anyone who keeps house in Venice will find that the picturesque surroundings are carried on in all the details of life. The kitchen, for instance, will be more primitive than any kitchen you have yet seen. If your apartment is anything short of a palace, it is apt to be a specimen room, around the top of which runs a row of shelves filled with pewter plates. There are rows of copper pots and saucepans, and there are fascinating earthen dishes and casseroles of every size, and in the inventory there is sure to be a round wooden board with a stubby handle, to turn out the steaming polenta. Polenta is nothing in the world but an excellently made cornmeal mush—cornmeal mush with the mushiness left out, for to be perfect polenta must have consistency. Besides the exact proportions of water, salt, and meal, polenta, to be good, must be stirred continually, and a long cudgel for this purpose is another item in the kitchen furnishings. Our polenta was cooked in a copper pot hung on a crane over a wood fire, and this brings me to the cooking arrangements. There is no stove in this Venetian kitchen, there is nothing to cook on by means of which an American cook could turn out a square meal. There is a wide soapstone hearth, the size of the ordinary range, surmounted by an imposing hood. On this hearth, without aid of andirons, is built a wood fire. The sticks are long, and only one end is lighted—the other end extends on to the edge of the hearth, and as the lighted ends burn down the stick is pushed back into the flame. On either side of this fire stands a fennel, an earthenware vessel, something like a large, square flower pot.

In these are made charcoal fires, quite large enough to heat two bathtubs at the same time. This is all the cooking arrangement; there is no place for roasting or broiling. No bread, cake, or biscuit is ever made in an Italian house. If you wish to roast a turkey or a large bird you send it in its pan, with the butter for its basting, to the baker, who roasts it to a beautiful brown for from 3 to 5 cents. The smaller fowls are roasted in one of the large copper casseroles, and by turning and twisting and basting incessantly, the bird is perfectly roasted as one would wish. There is no place for keeping anything hot on this embryonic range, and with only three places for cooking, something must be cooked first and set aside to make way for other dishes. On the other hand, there could not be a more economical way of cooking. In a very few moments the charcoal fire burns at full pitch, and if one wishes for just enough and no more to broil a chop, one may have it without having to light a fire sufficient to cook an entire dinner, as one would have to do with us, for the fuel for an American kitchen range costs anywhere between 25 and 35 cents a day. In Italy fuel, including both wood and charcoal, costs 10 cents a day for a family of moderate size—Filarin.
