WEEKS & McCARTNEY

40 WEST SECOND SOUTH STREET

New Reporter and His Ideas.

THE new reporter was telling of his first week's experience on a metropolitan newspaper.

"It was a revelation," he said. "I had come from a small town and university, and just four days out from graduation—but in the city my theses on the Religion of Homer and on the Differences in Sallust and Cicero's Accounts of the Catiline Conspiracy seemed more hopelessly behind than ever Spain was to Columbus' sailors when they went to a new hemisphere. I had no new theories to shout out to a world that was old enough to smile at me; but as I looked on the many people in the streets I realized strongly how much I had yet to learn."

"And so I went in to see the editor. I already had a trial assured me, and in a few minutes I found myself put temporarily on the city editor's staff. There came one great surprise. My ideas of a city editor's office of a large newspaper was a confused, roaring din, with wild-eyed reporters writing almost directly into the typesetting machines. The only notion I had was given by a one-time reporter who had written a great deal of fiction, some of it describing newspaper work. I fancied myself writing 'in the click and clung of the Mergenthalers and the roar of the big Hoe multiple presses.' It was two days before I knew of the linotype machines, and the presses were unheard. Instead of my picture I saw several well-arranged desks, a cool and excellently lighted room, and very sane and rational-looking men working quietly. Homer and Sallust came a bit nearer."

"Soon I heard the editor call my name. Here is a news item; this prominent citizen is about to die. We wish a personal estimate of his position in church matters. I would suggest that you see those men of his calling. This was more hopeful—for if there was one thing that I did know something about it was the church."

"In my mental idea of the reporter, the omnipresent notebook played a prominent part, and so at a table by stationer's I stopped and purchased a red notebook. There were six men whom I wanted to see after traveling for two hours. I found that four were out of the city. Two remained—I would discuss things with them more fully. I did see both; I announced myself as a reporter from my paper, told my wants, and waited expectantly."

"I should be glad to oblige my friends of your paper at any other time," each said, but just now I positively cannot say one word for publication. Please give my regards to your editor."

"I came away disappointed. There was yet time to make the last edition with an article, and I called the city editor over the telephone and offered to get up something at a library—and learned that such things were written in advance.

COMPLICATED AFFAIRS.

"So next morning it was another news item, a lawsuit, and a decision concerning the traction lines of the surface railways of the city and the probable outcome. This was a puzzle. The surface lines were more of a maze to me than any Daedalus ever built, and I had at least to know something about them before I could take up the manager's time in an interview. I sat down on the outside of his office and memorized ten different lines, their capital stocks, leases, and earnings, given in an article in the morning paper. After waiting two hours I was ushered in. I luckily put my question without a mistake."

"We are going to follow the decision of the court exactly," he said. "Have you read it?" I had not. I should advise you to read it, as the case is covered there. I managed to get in one more question with little result. "However, when I returned to the office I wrote about a half-column, which, on advice, I made into a three-line item, in collaboration with the assistant city editor, and this was changed unmercifully."

"To tell of a third experience: I was sent to a large hospital to write of the preparations being made for the Fourth of July. I approached the superintendent—I have learned that it is always better to go to the highest in authority, for the smaller men may give you little things, but the big ones come from headquarters—and he told me that none were being made, and that the Fourth was not necessarily an unusual day for the hospital forces. That was a setback, but I sought my opinions to the occasion, and I sought to confound the demagogic fanatics who shouted at the country's barbarism. I found a story there, though a short one, and it was put on the first page."

FIRST IMPRESSIONS.

"This is enough of my work in detail—let me tell you of the larger impressions. "First, I had an entire reversal in my idea of newspaper news. The widespread notion that reporters have no regard for truth is not at all correct, even to the smallest detail they are as exact as they can be, as a rule. The reporter who takes a pride in his work is not the one who colors his news with tints not in the spectrum of nature, but the one who distinguishes Smith from Smith and Brown from Brown. Of course, it is not so cultivated and dried as that would imply—the interpretation comes in and the point of view, nevertheless, carefulness is a cardinal and essential virtue."

"Then there are two kinds of newspapers, as it seems to me. The one reports a crime or other story in four inch headlines, giving it undue importance, and is concerned only with facts, which are little enough a part of the whole; the other paper looks at the news from a relative standpoint, the conditions which beget it, and its results. The first sees only the present, and the other takes thought for all time. A statistician and a liar might write the newspaper of fact, but it needs more than that to observe and draw inferences."

"One thing more that I realized, outside of the office, was the influence which the newspaper has in the opinions of the people. Though the 'baseball extra' is the most popular edition with many, and the editorials consequently at a discount, yet the fact that these who think are dependent on the papers for their news is a great deal. The average man follows the events of politics closely, and especially the laborer. The education of this class into a thinking unit is a remarkable advance, and the newspaper plays an important part in the movement."

"And so I have gone on, learning a little here and there, and hoping someday to come to that paradise of reporters where the ruthless pencil of the assistant editor has no terrors and the flowers of rhetoric bloom uncut."

WONDERS OF RADIUM.

Causes Every Form of Birthmark and Mole to Disappear.

In view of the announcement of the establishment of a radium institute under the patronage of the king, and in view, furthermore, of the remarkable work being done in the London hospital in the treatment of diseased human tissues with radium, great interest attaches to the lecture recently delivered at the clinical theater of that institution by Sir Frederick Treves.

Sir Frederick began by uttering a word of warning to those disposed to take too sanguine a view of the possibilities of radium in therapeutics and reminded the scientists and surgeons present that some optimists expected a total revolution of surgery by the use of X rays and a high frequency current of Finsen light.

"These have done marvelous work," he said, "but have not fulfilled all the conditions expected."

larged blood vessels, in one instance covering one side of a girl's face. In another instance a solid mass the size of an egg on a boy's arm vanished after a month's treatment.

"It is safe to say that there is a relation between the amount of radium used and the amount of good done," said Sir Frederick. "At the present moment we have only small quantities, but we are dealing with a substance that may be regarded as almost limitless in power. This cannot be said of X rays and Finsen light. From the fact that this relation exists we may draw the conclusion that, so far as growths of a certain type are concerned, it is only a matter of time when we can carry out whatever may be the wishes of the surgeon."

The effect of radium in chronic eczema is well known. As regards violent ulcers I may say those certain types may be cured by radium. One case in which an ulcer was of many years' duration and instructions with the tissue had adhered to the bone was successfully treated by X rays and Finsen light. A cure, nevertheless, was effected at two sittings with radium."

CREMATION PRACTISED BY YUMA INDIANS

The greatest display of natural intelligence seen among them is their tribal custom of cremation. This, according to their legends, was taught them by their Creator, Matevilye, and Aey's deliver him instructions with the use of X rays and Finsen light. From the fact that this relation exists we may draw the conclusion that, so far as growths of a certain type are concerned, it is only a matter of time when we can carry out whatever may be the wishes of the surgeon."

"The body is prepared at once after death and carried out in blankets to the place of cremation which has in the meanwhile been prepared. A shallow hole has been dug in the earth and the fuel piled high on this. The body is placed on the top of the fuel, after which fire is applied at the four cardinal points. During the time of the burning the multitude stand about and wail in the most melancholy fashion, continuing until fuel and body are but a mass of embers and ashes. These are raked into a pile and covered with earth. And so are the last rites to the departed among the tribes of the Yuma stock.—Edward S. Curtis in Scribner.
