

had notified the quarantine physician some time ago, but he had taken no action. A motion was then made that the quarantine physician be reprimanded for neglect of duty. The motion was lost, for the reason that the quarantine physician had not been given the opportunity to present his side of the case.

The council then adjourned for one week.

ARRESTS AT OGDEN.

Two arrests were made in Ogden a few days ago and the officers think they have got hold of a couple of bad men. In fact, there is an idea that as well as being engaged in other crimes, the prisoners are the ones who robbed the R. G. W. express at Thompson Springs. The Standard has the following regarding the arrests:

Yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock Edward Dayton was arrested as the man who a few days ago had robbed Tom Denison of the money which he was bringing from the gambling hall to the safe in Maden's saloon, Twenty-fourth. On that occasion a lone man entered the hall of the saloon and, at the point of the pistol, stole a sack of money containing about $338 from Denison, as he was coming down the stairway to place the money, in the safe for the night. The police officers have been following up the clues for some time, but have failed to find the culprit. The arrest was made by Sheriff Belnap and U. S. Marshal Pratt on Twenty-fifth. They had been watching the place of a ticket broker opposite the Novelty Theatre, lately burned down, and after becoming satisfied that a man there was the one they wanted they decided on the action necessary to take him, as he had already proved himself to be a desperate character. As Dayton walked out of the office they marched on each side and taking him by the arm on one side and the hand on the other side they quietly informed him that he was a prisoner. He was taken to the county court house and searched. In his pockets were found a number of dynamite cartridges which he had carried with him, he said, from Colorado. When they proposed to search him he jumped back, saying he was not going to be searched like a common criminal, as he was not guilty of anything wrong. The officers brought their guns to bear on him and he yielded to the necessity of the occasion and was searched. He was stripped of his coat and vest and on him was found a sack which bore the inscription, "$250, Commercial National Bank." This sack contained $22 in silver dollars. This, together with a couple of pocket books and a few trinkets, constituted the amount found on his person. A mouth organ which he particularly asked for must not be forgotten among the effects.

The officers are satisfied that they have the right man and they are also satisfied that they have a man who is wanted in other localities.

They have a photographed circular of a man whom they suppose to be the one now in custody. That man is accused of murdering Wm. McCoy at Silver Lake, Deer Lodge County, Montana, on the 16th of June, 1889, and at the same time dangerously wounding two others. A reward of $500 is offered by the governor of the Territory and $100 by the sheriff of the county.

Besides these offenses, it is understood that he has been connected with the train robbers which have lately caused so much excitement in the country.

Tom Denison was taken up to the jail to see if he could identify the man. As soon as he heard him talk he said that it was the identical voice. When a soft felt hat was placed on his head instead of the stiff hat he wore, Denison recognized the features of the man; he claimed that it made the features look rounder and as they appeared to him at the time of the robbery. The authorities of the county where Caleb Perry is wanted will be notified of the capture, and on their appearance they will soon decide whether he is the man they want or not.

The second chapter of this capture was enacted late in the evening. Upon consultation between the officers it was decided that the second man caught during the afternoon was wanted as much as Edward Dayton, and it was decided to hunt him up if possible. Marshal Pratt set out to do so at once and with good success. Between 8 and 9 o'clock he was arrested at the depot. He then had a valise with him which contained some corduroy clothing.

Wm. Brown, of the police force, started out after another man who appeared to be an accomplice, but he managed to escape. On talking with the man arrested it was learned that he was J. E. Dayton, a brother of Edward Dayton. After much persuasion he was induced to tell where a second satchel was hidden and started to take Marshal Pratt to the spot. As they began the march to the willows near the U. C. bridge the marshal refused to go any further and the fellow was brought up town. The sheriff was then telephoned for and at once came down. A hack was taken and the parties went down to the bridge to find the satchel. J. E. Dayton says he was born in Circle Valley, on the Sevier river, in Utah, and had during the last winter worked in Montrose, Colorado. He came here with his brother two weeks ago and had been here since. He knew nothing of the robbery except what he had seen in the papers and did not know why his brother had been arrested. There were about three years difference between his age and that of his brother. This much was learned from him and then the sheriff arrived and the party went down to hunt the satchel. In a short time the hackmen returned and stated that they needed more light, as they were unable to find the hiding place, it being too dark for Dayton to point it out. The lanterns having been obtained, the reporter took the opportunity of going down with the hackmen to see how the search would come out. When the bridge was reached the officers had already found the satchel. "Handle it carefully" was the injunction, as they handed the satchel into the hack. It contained about forty rounds of ammunition, several sticks of powder, a large revolver, supposed to be the one used by Edward at the time of the hold up of Denison, and a few other articles. The prisoner and the satchel were taken up to the county court house, where the one was locked up and the other stored away for safe keeping. The younger brother claims to know nothing of the robbery, but says that the elder brother had supplied him with money in silver whenever he needed it. Where he had obtained it he did not know. He was bent on getting away from the town when arrested by Deputy Marshal Pratt.

CLAIRE WATSON'S DEATH.

You are already informed by telegram of the sad and fatal accident that happened in Parowan Canyon on the morning of the 12th inst, and I send you further particulars.

L. D. Watson, of this place, returned a short time ago from serving a second term of imprisonment for unlawful cohabitation, as it is called, and is quite sick. He had been laboring in the canyon for two or three weeks past, with his young son, Claire, 13 years of age, trying to get up the winter's wood for the family.

When coming down the mountain into the canyon with a load of wood, last Thursday, about 10 a. m., Brother Watson was driving the team, with his son Claire managing the brake. At a steep, rocky point, not more than two rods in length, but very rough, the brake chain broke, throwing the wagon and weight of the load on to the horses. The frightened animals ran away, breaking the tongue and otherwise smashing things. Brother Watson and his boy jumped on the upper side of the dug way, the lower side being too deep. There being no much footing, both fell came under the wagon. The boy came on his face, when the hind wheel of the loaded wagon passed over the crushing of his back breaking and crushing his spine and bowels. His father, who had his leg run over and was otherwise bruised and cut, hastened to his boy and gathered him in his arms. The poor boy looked up and said, "Oh, pa, I can't live, but if you are not hurt I don't care." He died at 5 o'clock in the afternoon. The boy and his father were more like companions than father and son. It was the boy's greatest pleasure to be with his father all the time.

Brother Watson being gone a great deal of the time in prison, the care of the family, to a great extent, fell upon the boy, which duty he performed most manfully, and especially the mother, are inconsol-
