

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

The evening choir will sing the anthem, "In a Plurim," with a vocal solo from Miss Evans. "Just as I am Without One Sin," arranged by E. T. Kimball, the organist of the church.

A Salt Lake quartet will sing in English on the 21st inst., on the occasion of the meeting of the Utah Federation of Women's clubs. The singers are Mrs. Stanley Price, Miss Edna Cohn, M. J. Brines and H. W. Dougall, and they will render "In a Plurim Garden."

Piano men are complaining of the shortage of railroad cars, along with the stock, beef, coal, lumber and grain men. One Kansas dealer has had a carload of pianos on the road for 30 days, and the location of this car has not been ascertained.

Piano tuning is now held to be both a science and an art.

The Orpheus club is practicing carefully for the concert to be given on the evening of the 25th inst., in the First Methodist church with Miss Condon. The club is expected to sing three times, aside from encores, and the latter will, no doubt, double the program.

Mr. Brines has organized a piano club of 15 voices at the Y. M. C. A., and is confident he has some good material there.

Nov. 2, in Carnegie hall, Peckings to that he will play at Bridgeport and Baltimore.

David Frohman has engaged the Russian Symphony orchestra, Modest Alievich, conductor, to assist Kappel at his first American concert on Sunday, Nov. 10, at the Hippodrome.

Mr. Henry W. Savage has received a telegram from Mrs. Evans Lehman, composer of "The Merry Widow," saying that owing to engagements in Europe he will be unable to come to New York to attend the opening performance of his opera at the New Amsterdam theater Oct. 21.

Hard work is the lot of great artists, Paderewski is the greatest pianist of our time, yet he is practicing six hours a day for his American tour. His hours for practice are from 5 to 12 and 3 to 5. He is adding a number of new familiar works to his usual repertoire. The most important addition to his list will be the Liszt sonata, which Paderewski considers the greatest work ever written for the piano.

Lovers of Paderewski's music will be glad to hear that the new manuscript songs, the disappearance of which worried him so much, two months before his death, have been found. They will no doubt be of value for Paderewski's pupils, and his pupils in the last although he wrote very little. He might Herbert score of "Dream City," signed an affidavit corroborating Mr. Herbert's statements.

The most imposing and the most impressive feature of Paderewski's funeral was the crowd," writes Dr. Adolf Brodsky, the eminent violinist who was one of the pallbearers, in the Musical Courier. "In my estimate there must have been between 40,000 and 50,000 people there was not a corner, a building for piano, no stretching of necks to see better from old man to young, all had the same grave expression of awe which showed that they felt their loss." The hearse was drawn by four black horses. As it passed through the streets, the houses draped with flags, all the people uncovered their heads. The procession consisted of hundreds of deputations with standards headed with the names of the societies to which the deputations belonged. There were about 10,000 persons in this procession. All the schools, all the shops and all the mills were closed. The funeral services included the laying down of 32 wreaths, those of the king and queen of Norway and the German emperor coming first. The musical services began with Paderewski's "In Spring," and ended with the funeral march composed in memory of Nordraak. "This," writes Dr. Brodsky, "is written for a military band only. But the only available military band in Bergen is so small that it is impossible to play it. The composer, therefore, orchestrated it for an ordinary orchestra. And he did it so well that the instrumentals were so complete in Paderewski's manner that it sounded as if it had been done by Paderewski himself. It is a beautiful piece of music, fresh and much to be heard in its present form, a standing place in the repertoire of the leading orchestras."

WHAT a glow is in the sky, these days. How blue is the sky, and how white and filmy the clouds floating over the Wasatch afternoons. The trails leading away from the boulevard in the canyon are thick with leaves, and through the thin, cold quaking aspens and soft maples one catches rare and beautiful glimpses of the stream, and the hills opposite, divided into sunshine and shadow.

It is strange that with all the warmth and vigor and health to be had what I've done, I'm sure, and I don't care. I shall pay no attention to her in future.

The first speaker stepped back in her luxurious chair and sipped her tea with an injured air. The second speaker pondered things. In her brain she wanted to say nice things about the absent one, misjudged, but hesitated. Her own position was certainly worth something, so close to that gilded throne she loved so well.

"She takes a long walk every evening at 5, I'm told," continued the injured lady of the gilded throne. "I wish I could go for walks, she can certainly make time for calls."

higher than five and are destitute of all the arts and amenities of life. There is perhaps the lowest plane of human life, some people have assumed. Out the boomerang was the creation of an older and higher civilization, but for this there is no evidence. It must be the product of a long-ago empirical use of throwing weapons. London Spectator.

SCENE IN "THE ROYAL CHEF" AT THE SALT LAKE THEATER NEXT WEEK.

two Salt Lake instrumental soloists who are representing the Bee Hive state at the Jamestown exposition, is received here with particular gratification, and the announcement by one of the fair officials that the visiting artists, Messrs. McClellan and Weihe, were the most talented to be present up to date, is considered a deserved compliment. It was predicted before they left town that they would make something of a sensation at the exposition.

Musical events have been few and far between this week, although the various teachers are having plenty to do in giving instruction. The attention of local musical people in general has been directed toward the completion of the Congregational organ, which has occupied three months. But it is now in much better condition than when first built, and the improvements added have made it a credit to the firm which reconstructed it. Prof. Peabody, the St. Mark's organist, affiliated at the informal exhibition test last Monday night, as Prof. Shepherd was unable to be present. Both Prof. Peabody and the pastor, trustees and invited friends were greatly pleased with the result; so there was no delay in accepting the rebuilt instrument. The radial, concave form of pedal box was especially commended, and the builders say it is taking so well with the organists over the country that it has evidently come to stay.

At the First Methodist church tomorrow morning, Hugh W. Dougall will sing the baritone aria, from "Eljah," "Is Not His Voice Like a Fire?" In

SHARPS and FLATS

Alice Nielsen arrived in Boston last week, to join the San Carlo Opera company.

Madame Emma Farnes has been invited to sing "Aida," before the Emperors Francis Joseph of Austria, and William of Germany, at Berlin.

Paderewski's first New York concert will be given on Saturday afternoon.

Salt Lake hand men who are using Conn instruments will be interested in learning that Mr. Conn might be the next governor of Indiana. The Democrats propose to put him at the head of their ticket.

St. Paul's organ was tuned and overhauled this week, so it is now in excellent condition.

The anthem at the First Congregational church tomorrow will be "Lord, We Pray Thee" by Dr. J. V. Roberts. The quartet is composed of Mrs. Edward Moore, soprano, Miss Edna Dwyer, alto, Mr. George Rogers, tenor, and Mr. Claude J. Nettleton, baritone.

Manager Spencer of the Salt Lake Symphony orchestra announces that the first symphony concert has been postponed from Oct. 25 to Nov. 1. Director Shepherd will resume his place in the orchestra at rehearsal tomorrow at the usual hour and place.

Henry W. Savage returned to New York last week after starting "Madam Butterfly" on her second American tour, and sent out a hurry call for the heads of all departments to begin work at once on a new production of Edward Gorman's "Tom Jones." This new English opera is scheduled to open in Plainfield, N. J., on Oct. 31, after which it will be seen in Washington and Boston before coming to New York.

Victor Herbert, through his attorney, recently obtained an order in the supreme court from Justice Ford directing Joseph Weber, Jacob Wells, Otto Harlan, Edgar Smith, and Maurice Levi to show cause why they should not be enjoined from presenting "Dream City." Mr. Weber is said to have eliminated the Herbert music from the piece and substituted melodies by Mr. Levi, Charles K. Harris, who published the have made much money by dashing off things for the market, but he was not that sort of a man, and he died worth only $95,000.

"Robin Hood" was sung on Monday night at the Lincoln Square Theater, New York, by the newly organized Abner Opera company. The performance is the first of a season of opera in English and after two weeks "Cavaleria" and "Piafere" will be sung. Miss Estelle Wentworth and Mr. George B. Frothingham of the old Bostonians will be in the cast, and others will include Mr. Harold Blake, and Miss Elfrida Husung.

A very pale young woman sat in one of Salt Lake's theaters a few nights ago. So pale that the very sight of her had taken such pains to produce, and most unbecomingly. One could not look well if not well, especially in extreme style. For two solid hours that very afternoon, this girl had worked, and toiled and labored, over her hair. The strongest among us cannot hold the arms over the head for more than an hour and a half, without experiencing some slight fatigue. At the end of two hours, the girl in question was a nervous wreck, and her head a perfect fright. Her own hair had been mangled, pulled, rattled, patted and coiled till her mother scarcely recognized her child, and after all this, by actual count, 15 artificial puffs were appended. The whole stood out to the ridiculous point of exaggeration, and arrived at the show, people in the seat back could not see the single. To be asked to kindly remove one's hair would no doubt be taken as an insult, but the fact remains that the present mode demands artificial hair, and the hat is not more annoying in obstructing the view.

Half of this young woman's time is spent in self adornment, and she is forever imbibing a tonic. It is fresh air she needs, and not artificial hair to make her beautiful. A few turns on the hillside, a glorious breeze, would no doubt impart color to her cheek and a sparkle to her eye, not found in any known drug, while her hair would take care of itself. Beautiful health renders no false puff. In a few turns on the hillside might also be found a little wholesome mental food, especially recommended for poise. A younger sister, also delicate, and pale, puts in her time after school, not in the glow of the sun, but in standing before the mirror with nerve and energy directed toward the best effects of a wash, tooth brush, and comb, and her hand—tongue and tongue, pulling and twisting, pinning and poking, and all for school text day. A head-dress rearranged. As she finally dresses, near the supper table, bedeck, haggard, and no appetite, her mother says: "Letty, have you taken your medicine? No? Then take it. At once, you are not a speck of color in your cheeks."

Letty takes her medicine like a dutiful daughter, and studies when she ought to be sleeping, and in the morning wants no breakfast.

There are two young women in this town. They house themselves by day, and the night finds them at cards, and late supper. This unnatural mode of living is telling upon them, yet they cannot afford to be out of the swim. Perhaps they can afford to love their health. Through the day they plot and plan for appearance's sake, at night they make many of their own clothes, which to be sure is commendable, although they rather their social friends did know it. Getting into a building a hundred calls into one afternoon. What a life—a nervous, frivolous, unsatisfied social whirl—what for? Not happiness, surely, and all the while the outer and white liekness to them to come out and know what health of body is, and brightness of spirit, and peace of mind, and vigor of thought, and expansion of heart, but—

"Do you know, I called on so-and-so, but she never returned my call."

"And has she never explained?"

"Oh, she said she was out one day, and talked about being very busy, but that's no excuse. Are we not all busy?"

"I think she is very busy, though, dear," timidly.

"But a call's a call, and I don't know

SALT LAKE BOYS' BAND.

The Salt Lake boys' band, which left its home city early this summer, practically unknown, and returned this fall with a national reputation to its credit, and a banner declaring it to be from Salt Lake, which it carried in its many middle western and western cities, is to be given a rousing welcome when it is heard in the grand theater Tuesday afternoon next.

Friends of the youngsters have taken a number of selling tickets in hand, and have so far secured sales enough to insure a good sized audience. The board of education has been approached on the matter of disbanding the schools a little early to allow all the children to attend, and see how the boys of the Belvidere league behave in handling their instruments.

The picture of the lads printed above was taken at their camp in Lake Winona, Ind. Some of them, it will be seen, are scarcely a dozen years old. Some of them are over 18. About half joined the band because they liked the opportunity to take lessons from Prof. Christensen, and half came from the boys of the juvenile court in the early days of its organization.

The program Tuesday will consist largely of the best class of classical music, and reports from the east are that the boys have mastered this class of composition with surprising skill and success.

The friends of the boys in charge of Tuesday afternoon's matinee hope to make it a highly successful tribute to the splendid success their little friends won in the eastern tour.
