

My First Night's Experience on the Stage

By Paul Everton, of "The Third Degree" Company.

My chance to go on the stage came to me while a boy living in Brooklyn. I was working for a retail clothing company, when one of the clerks in the store, who was a prominent member of a dramatic society, offered me a part with the Amaranth Dramatic club of Brooklyn. They were going to put on Sheridan Knowles' play, "The Critic," which incidentally was afterwards produced by the late Augustin Daly under the title of "Tragedy Rehearsed." I eagerly accepted the offer made to me by my friend, and in a cast for "The Beef Eater" in this play,

Learning that Robert Hilliard and Edith Kingston, now Edith Kingston Gould, had at one time belonged to this dramatic society, I began to picture myself as a star. So anxious was I to begin my theatrical work that I was two hours ahead of time at the first rehearsal. My part consisted of only a few lines, and yet during the five weeks this piece was being rehearsed under the direction of a man by the name of Beck, a great legitimate director at that time, I must have gone over my part at least 5,000 times. The first performance was given at the old Academy of Music in Brooklyn in the winter of 1885. So excited was I by the event which would mark an epoch in my life, and desirous of getting to the theater, my mother had considerable difficulty in persuading me to eat dinner. Gulping down my food I rushed out of the house and ran to the theater. The performance went smoothly without anything happening of particular interest until my big scene. This was where I was given the line, and my line, "Ha! Ha! A lie," was a cue for a mortal combat with swords. This combat had been rehearsed over and over again, and I consisted of making the figure 4 with my sword, and then striking against my adversary's sword. So earnest was I in making the duel as realistic as possible that I put all my strength back of my sword and my adversary became so scared that he dropped his sword and stood out on his forehead and his limbs shook as if he had the palsy. The audience did not realize anything out of the ordinary, but my fellow actors, attracted by the noise made by the clashing swords, stood in the wings and gazed at us in breathless astonishment. I suppose that if my sword had not broken, the fight would still be going on. This was such a terrific climax that the amateur stage manager rang for the curtain, which descended amidst storms of applause.

Incidentally, I was notified that my services with the Amaranth Dramatic club would no longer be required.

Poley's Honey and Tar cures the air passages, stops the irritation in the throat, soothes the inflamed membrane, and the most obstinate cough disappears. Sore and inflamed lungs are healed and strengthened, and the cold is expelled from the system. Refuse any but the genuine in the yellow package. F. J. Hill Drug Co. ("The never substitutes.")
