A NEW HAT AND COLLAR.

One of the most fascinating varieties of the milliner's art is illustrated in this mushroom-shaped hat made of black velvet and trimmed with a big spread of black bird of Paradise tails, tipped with pale yellow. A big black-bird's-head confines the Paradise feathers in a becoming position at the front of the hat, so that the spread over the crown is very graceful. This hat represents one of the most modish models affected by the ultra-fashionables. The high, plain, feathered collar with its left side trimming of buttons is a late French fancy.

In Women's World.

The Parisiennes are noted for the beauty of their veils. They understand better than the women of other nations the value of a becoming length of tulle net. This winter there is a distinct revival of the pale blue tulle veil, spotted with black chenille and edged with a narrow plaited fringe. This is the veil to wear with chinchilla and sable toques. It is also the veil for a wintry day if the complexion be clear and sufficiently bright. Pale blue is much more flattering to the complexion than the average woman believes, much more so than in various shades of pink, which are erroneously called "beauty veils." There is a certain shade of this nuance that is flattering to the skin, but it cannot be bought in the ordinary shop, and even at its best cannot be worn by all women. There is an elegance about the pale blue veil spotted with black, and it is especially attractive when combined with a marabou set in the natural shade.

A woman who recently visited Paris is wearing a novel necklace, quaint and inconspicuous, but costing, she says, almost a prince's ransom. It is a simple strand of black tulle, long enough to pass around the neck and loop in front, with a diamond tassel depending from each of its ends. The head of each of the tassels is a dome shaped gold plate, incrustated thickly with the gems, and from these hang fringes of the tiny stones, each strand so perfect in workmanship that it is flexible as a string of beads. Necklaces in which black tulle, velvet or grogram ribbon are combined with the costliest stones have superseded the long jeweled chains in the favor of the Parisienne. The prettiest examples are in narrow velvet ribbon ornamented with jeweled slides, the slides the work of artists, and no two necklaces duplicate in design. The fancy for the combination of silken materials with gems is creeping in among other ornaments. The newest bracelets and brooches have velvet or ribbon.

It may not be fashionable to go about in rainy weather, but it is, nevertheless often necessary, and in every outfit there should be one costume that is suitable for inclement weather. An old clothes suit is generally relegated to this sort of wear and is often excellent for the purpose, but frequently the only suit that is old enough for the purpose is too elaborate to be appropriate. The simpler the rainy day suit the better, and there must be no plaits or trimmings to be ruined by the dampness. The skirt should be some inches shorter than the regular walking skirt and should be sufficiently full to be becoming, but as just stated must have no plaits which would require the skirt to be pressed after each outing. A plain tailor-made jacket of three-quarter length is the smarter, and the sleeves should be long, for long gloves are quite inappropriate for this style of dress.

LEAVES FROM OLD ALBUMS.

THE ONCE FAMOUS WM. HORACE LINGARD.

This picture will revive hosts of pleasant memories in the minds of old Salt Lake Theater goers. Lingard was one of the prime favorites of the late sixties and early seventies. He and his two sisters "Dickie" and Alice Dunning Lingard came here as members of the "British Blondes," a troupe which gave Salt Lake almost its first experience of burlesque interpreted in tights. Lingard was the originator of "Walking Down Broadway," in which he dressed in the character shown in the picture. He also brought out "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," and was famous for his monologues and sketches. He died some years ago in England. Alice Dunning Lingard became an accomplished actress and appeared several times afterward at the Salt Lake Theater. One of the two sisters married Mr. Parsons, the Wells Fargo magnate of New York.

"Education is to prepare the pupil for life's battles. It should include preparation for the most important battle of all—the moral battle."

Where do they come from and where do they go? "Where do they live? Are they mere creatures of the street, blown either and you by every immoral breath that blows, or do they just happen to be walking the public highways, or riding on the cross town cars, by night, for their health? Have they mothers, fathers, homes? Such and many are the questions that plague and worry the minds of the people who have our cities' best interests at heart, when they behold irresponsible youth of both sexes at large after nightfall, and seemingly controlled by the baneful influences of the town. Does no one know anything about these stray children of the night?"

Everybody is wondering what has become of the servant girls. There never was such a dearth of them as now. Can it be they have one and all taken them, like burned bridges, rendering their return steps impossible?

They all have pretty much the same look—the girls you see on the car or street, many of them mere children. Their general appearance seems to tell the story. Their hair dressed, or rather not dressed, in a very much crinkled and kinky fashion, with a huge, untidy bow at the nape of the neck or behind each ear; above this bow a piece of a hat; elbow sleeves—even their coat sleeves rolled back to the elbow, exposing cold red, anything but attractive-looking arms; the highest of high heel slippers complete the make-up. Mock valentines! Whence came they? Whither go they?

A little girl by the name of Nellie is a fair example, or rather, a sad sample, of this entire lot of the above described servant-girl that flies by night. She was only sixteen, and very pale and frail, with countenance worn out, and with barely "a finger touch of God left whole" upon it. She made the most heroic attempts to perform her daily work. Pathetic little figure she was, and a fit subject for tears, as she went about in the kitchen, pausing, drooping, halting. The household was kind and patient in its earnest efforts to reform Nellie, and were at times so far successful as to prevail upon her to remain in now and then and go to bed early. But almost every night she would say she was going

Prepared--Not Manufactured.

Ghirardelli's Ground Chocolate is prepared, not manufactured. There's a difference. It is made by Nature and prepared by Ghirardelli. The Ghirardelli process simply renders available all the natural goodness of the cocoa bean. That's why it is so pure, delicious, satisfying and health giving, and that's why everybody likes it so well.

Ask your grocer for it. Be sure that you get it.

home. Yes, Nellie had a home, and parents, but— Well, she never went home, but always to town, returning alone long after midnight. Perhaps the town had too firm a hold on her; perhaps in her nature was an "element of corruptibility" which no education can remove; at any rate, one morning Nellie was not at her post, nor her home, nor in fact anywhere, and it was "one more unfortunate gone to her"—worse than death. This is but one case in the many. Can it be that the whole lot of our city's household help has gone the way of Nellie? Swallowed in that swirl that carries them down for good and all?

One day last week a fine girl—an exception to the rule—who works faithfully and honestly by the day, said:

"They offered me any price; they cannot get girls."

"And you accepted?"

"Well, I should say not," most emphatically. "I do not want to lose my good name. Hotel girls bear the same reputation."

"What has become of all the hotel girls?"

"Gone to the bad, I guess."

"Think of it! Does the struggle for bread and butter among the working girls, household and otherwise, mean loss of character?"

"Many of the clerks in our dry goods stores are bad," was announced not long ago. And while we do not believe this statement and will shortly make a stand in defense of the many and good girls we are acquainted with in the stores, yet we are forced to believe there must be some ground for such a remark. Certain cases have been proven.

Is it possible that that snake in the grass that thrives on vice, and whose coils are fast in the eastern cities, is extending its sinuous and poisonous lengths, and creeping into our town? God forbid! We know that many a girl—not to say the majority in Chicago—holds her position at the price of her reputation. A young girl, supporting her mother and self, lived in very modest apartments in Chicago. One afternoon she came home in tears. She did retouching in a large and prosperous photographic concern, human effort must at length prevail to compass it. To oppose a new idea of acknowledged or apparent social worth is to retard the progress of society."

"How is that child?" taking her to her breast.

"Same old story, mother."

Newbro's Herpicide

A "HAIR SAVER" THAT GROWS IN POPULARITY.

DANDRUFF IS A SIGN OF DANGER TO THE HAIR.

Dandruff is now known to be a disease—and a highly contagious one—that will in time destroy the hair and cause baldness.

The first indication of hair destruction is the appearance of dandruff, although there is always considerable injury to the scalp before dandruff finally appears.

The value of Newbro's Herpicide as an eradicator of dandruff and as a saver and beautifier of the hair, is now recognized by well-posted people everywhere. It is the ORIGINAL remedy that "kills the dandruff germ."

Herpicide is not a wonderful "discovery," nor is it the result of dream or revelation. It is simply a scientific germicide and prophylactic for the scalp and it is the first and only successful one to be compounded in harmony with Prof. Unna's theory. Prof. Unna, the dermatologist of Hamburg, Germany (ask your Doctor about him), was the first to advance the belief that dandruff, itching scalp and falling hair are caused by an invisible growth of vegetable character in the sebaceous glands of the scalp.

The investigations of Prof. Unna and other noted dermatologists prove that many have learned by actual experience, viz: that ordinary hair remedies are ineffectual to prevent hair loss and that to be successful the dandruff germ must be destroyed and kept out of the scalp.

The success of Newbro's Herpicide has demonstrated to the people at large and the incorrectness of old theories relative to treating the hair and scalp. Even the Manufacturers of other hair remedies recognize the inevitable and, one by one, they are changing their remedies to conform to the germ theory of dandruff.

But why experiment with remedies that have not been tried? Herpicide is the original success, so why bother with substitutes at any price?

MORE MEN AND WOMEN HAVE GOTTEN POSITIVE RESULTS FROM THE USE OF NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE THAN FROM ALL OTHER HAIR REMEDIES COMBINED.
