

STUDENTS' SOCIETY.

Instructor Philip Watson, "The Study of Science," Lect. 14, $1.00 each.

The Student's Society convened Friday last, at which Mr. Nelson presided and Instructor Philip W. Mayhew delivered a lecture on the subject, "Does the Study of Science lead to Infidelity?"

The speaker said the question was one of great importance, especially to students whose duty it was to study science.

Science is what is actually known whether in the material universe or in the world of mind, and must be knowledge that is systematically arranged, classified and learned. It is knowledge that is true, complete and accurate, and is such a form that it can be readily employed for purposes of thought. Much that is called science bears the stamp of spurious creation of little else than theories and hypotheses and although these may be of use to the scientist in enabling him to search for truth, still they are no more science than is the chisel with which the sculptor works in the magnificent statue which he has brought forth from the marble. It is this false science that has been in a great degree the cause of dispute and to exist between science and religion.

Infidelity means the loss of belief. To believe in God is a disbelief in certain dogmatical ideas of Christianity, to another the rejection of both Christ and the Bible, and to third it means the denial of the entire truth; but this latter is a pure, logical atheism.

Does science weaken our faith in God, His power, His promises, or His written word? In other words, does it lead to a renunciation of religion? If the true and the real are presented to us in science, and we accept one and reject the other, because they are in conflict, but if both truths are presented we can accept both or reject both. There can be no conflict between science and religion unless one is false and the other true. We can know the truth whether discovered by looking within upon the soul or without upon the world, whether written by the finger of God upon the strata of earth in the long ago, or in the heart of man by his own hand. He is the author of both and though at times they may wander apart in crooked paths, still they must eventually come together for the good each is aiming for is the same. In religion, as we worship the Creator, in science we try to show our appreciation of Him by studying what He has created. Therefore it is not power to knowledge, but knowledge to power which is the goal of science without having our faith in Him increased. Instead of weakness, superficial study of science may weaken, but thorough and deep study of science will strengthen and confirm the truth. There is no conflict between real science and true religion. True there has been a bitter and protracted warfare carried on between science and so-called religion. Sometimes the combatants have been on opposite sides, and if you want to see the white heat of controversial passion observe evolutionists, who do not differ at all, but who have adopted different words to express their views.

Honest men, men covering themselves with the cloak of religion have committed errors and crimes.

The lectures here enumerated some of the errors and crimes committed during the middle ages and in later times. The notion of the earth being a square plain at whose outer edges rose mountain walls supporting the vault of heaven, which was a copy of the firmament, was the error of the ancients. Over 100,000 men were set, and over 100,000 men were drawn by the angels. Above this was the celestial sphere and still above the seven-sharpened heaven in which highest stars dwell. Jehovah, who said, "I will make the earth as flat as a dish," believed that the earth must be round to be round. If it is round, then there must be man on the other side with their bodies higher than their heads where trees grow downwards and water flows upwards. This was the opinion of the ancients, and the statement was to be in danger of being exposed, and even life.

The miscreants gained through the creeds and doctrines of the dominion of Christ, and the errors and sins associated by science and the present grand conceptions of God's works tabulated in their place, and the little interpreted bright ears bear out this new age of infidelity.

It should be an equal of free investigation for searchers after truth, whether in theology or nature. All though at times they may seem at variance, it will finally be discovered that the objects of their search are side by side in the brotherhood of truth.

It would be that in studying science, speculations are made that cause us to doubt the word of God. This is not. The word of God in the rocks of revealed truth is the rock of living history with the voice of revelation, which declares that in the beginning God created the heavens and the earth. Great science discovered in the days of Aristotle that the air had weight, and that the atmosphere was not thin, but was known to be, too, too thin. Prognostic thousands of years ago, but the world, as in other things, has been blind to the statement. "God maketh the weight for the wind." Science, with her many remarkable discoveries, is now reversing the laws, revealing what Solomon makes plain in a few single verses. "All the rivers run into the sea yet the sea is not full. Unto the pure from whence the rivers come, they return again unto their source." The world, and the nature in the same, and it is impossible for them to continue when rightly understood. If the two cannot be held together, the fault is ours because of our weaks. We are not able to interpret right either one or the other or both.

The interpretations of men are not safe unless we understand them and make them safe. And frequently we have the word of others to guide us and are led away entirely through their misunderstanding of our own. We the fountain of nature and drink there the best draughts of truth rather than gain from the impure vessels of prejudiced investigation. We should judge of opinions by things rather than by words. To the true experimenter the knowledge of the law of gravitation is the law of the law of gravitation. In this lies the fallacy and sometimes in the impure vessels of science.

With the growth of science grows the application of the law of gravitation and within us is reflected to us. All the operations of nature are greatest and the most perfect now. Not even a simple water-carrier can move a stone in a manner that does not conform to scientific law.

The lecturer gave many other illustrations and explanations of the movements and causes of nature, as explained and made plain by the growth of science and the development of the law of gravitation.

These latter were shown to be both narrow and the result of prejudices and misconceptions of the overwhelming majority that caused the person to become narrow in his view of science.

At the close of the lecture, Mrs. Jessie Remond asked, "What does Miss Jenny think about the destructive work of America?" A young woman very modestly responded by name, Phoebe Irwin, Mr. Hauseman then inquired the answer with "Two Weeks in the Nut Shell."

This iteration of the program was a success and very interesting.

All those who took part in the remainder of the program were heartily applauded upon closing their respective portions. After the lecture the meeting adjourned for an hour.
