The Saturday Review reviews mercilessly one of the "goody" books of which the age is so prolific, entitled "Very Little Stories for Very Little Girls." It says: "This nuthor, with her 'words in season' for spring time, reminds us that we once heard of a person in greasy black clothes and a white the who got into an omnibus and handed to his fellow travelers a tract bearing the inspiring title, 'Are you aware the inspiring title, 'Are you aware that you are going to hell?'

The sales of paintings at auction made by Messrs. Christie & Co., of London, during the first ten days in May, reached £98,000, and the firm was equally busy during the remainder of the month. For the present month they advertise no less than seven sales, and if we may judge from the published catalogues they are all of importance. From this statement it will be seen that more pictures were sold in London in the month of May than in New York during the whole seasons of 1872-3.
