PARTY PRINCIPLES IGNORED.

The so-called American party organ claims that "party names and party principles count for nothing in Utah.' This is, of course, not true. It is one of the gross misstatements that form the chief assets of that organ. It is repeated for the only purpose of Influencing citizens not affiliated with the Church to support it in its campaign in the interest of graft and moral corruption.

It is not true that party names and principles count for nothing in Utah, because the majority of citizens here are true and loyal to the party of their choice. But it is true that, as far as the influence of the autocrats of the so-called American party extends, the names and principles of the great national parties count for absolutely nothing. They are the Esaas of the political arena. Their hand is against everybody that does not willingly obey their mandates. They are the enemies of both political parties, for their un-American alm is to obliterate party boundaries and array the citizens here against each other on religious lines. But they are too cowardly to come out in the open and ask the people to engage in their crusade upon a church; and so they endeavor to arouse the prejudices and inspire hatred by proclaiming the lie that the Church is plotting for political control in state and municipal affairs. It is a comfort to remember the great truth that not even a falsifler who has reduced lying to a science can fool all the people all the time,

The party organ says that until the organization of its party "there was denial of all the essential facts. There is no denial now." It is not entirely clear what this refers to. But in a preceding paragraph we are told that "it has been the American contention that the alleged division on party lines in Utah was a sham," and that "the theocracy dominates political affairs." If these are the so-called "essential facts" referred to, and which are said not to be denied, the denial is hereby cheerfully and emphatically offered. The division on party lines in Utah never was a sham with the majority of the people here, whatever it is with the manipulators of the American party, who naturally are inclined to judge others by themselves; further, there is no "theocracy" here that claims dominance in politics. is absolutely no other anomalous element in local polities, no other un-followers to capture first the city government, then the county administration, and finally the state machinery, in order to gain their ambitious political aims. They have been only partly successful so far, and their prospects are not bright, because they have too many broken promises to their credit. the Church is in politics will not help them to maintain a position in which moters and defenders of graft, Sabbath-breaking, and general corrup-

TROUBLE IN INDIA.

It seems that the trouble in India is rowing more serious than it appeared to be at first. Attacks are reported upon mission buildings and homes of missionaries, proving that the outbreak s of an anti-religious character, as vell as anti-European. There is an element of fanaticism in it, which must be reckoned with. But the chief notive is expressed in the demand of India for the Indians.

The Hindus, it is said, have commenced to agitate for popular government through an Indian parliament. Their methods have mostly been those f the press and platform. But one of the leaders, it is claimed, has recently amused himself by having himself solemnly crowned in the privacy of his own home, as king of India. This self-anointed monarch holds a court whither have flocked some of the ardent spirits of the movement and many of the younger writers. His so-called coronation has not attracted much attention. The British authorities simply stigmatized him as a buffoon. But who can tell what the development may be, particularly if foreign agttators step in and add fuel to the flames?

It is not probable that it will come to a formidable rising, but if the worst comes to the worst, Great Britain is better prepared to quell a mutiny now than it was fifty years ago, There are more British troops in India low. In 1856 the army in India was made up of 40,000 British and 215,000 natives. Today the British contingent is between 70,000 and 80,000 strong, while the native army in imperial pay numbers 155,000, or 60,000 less than in the pre-mutiny tlays. The great expansion of the Indian railroad system gives the British a facility for concentration, the lack of which greatly hampered them, and consequently prolonged the famous mutiny.

For some time it has been charged that Japanese agitators have been busy in India, endeavoring to create an anti-European sentiment. Japan, t has been said, is anxious to become he dominant power in all Asia, India included. If trouble comes, this should be investigated. If the 200,000,000 inhabitants were to act together, it is doubtful whether Great Britain would be able to control them. But they are not united. India consists of several countries with people so different in racial make-up, in thought and institutions, that vast regions might be counted on to throw their weight with the British simply to satisfy oldtime grudges, or to prevent an ascen-American factor, than the American dancy that would be more dangerous them than British rule can possibly Those freebooters hoped to disrupt | be. And as long as the Hindus fall the two parties and gather enough to co-operate in unity and harmony, foreign rule will continue.

PRONOUNCED A FAKE.

The alleged marvelous discovery by the Altoons, Pa., shoemaker, that ashes, when water, salt, and oxalic

H. Gill, professor of chemistry at the Massachusetts institute of theology. The statement was first brought to the notice of the general public in a dispatch from Altoona, and then it was commented on by a number of newspapers. The explanation was suggested that the addition of chemicals caused a more perfect combination and that the refuse, consequently, was considerably reduced. But Prof. Gill, in a letter to Power characterizes the entire story as "rot" and suggests the necessity of having a "scientific press censor to prevent the people from being fooled." He says he has seen a number of recipes similar to that of the Altoona cobbler, but none is of any mixture in question he says:

"The explanation given of its behavior is utterly wrong and misleading, for sola lye cannot be produced by bringing common sait solution upon quick-lime even, much less upon coal ashes. It is difficult to see how by any possibility acetylene could be formed, using his formula, and if it could, the quantity produced from two ounces of exalic acid, supposing all the carbon contained in it to be changed to acetylene (which it cannot), would be about 2-5 of an ounce, equal in heating value to a piece of coal the size of a hazel mut. When this mixture comes into the turnace the fire appears brighter from the volatilization of the sait, which colors all the flames intensely yellow: this sait condenses on the cooler parts of the boiler and economizer and corrodes them. The exalic acid is broken up by the heat of the fire into steam, carbonic acid, and carbonic oxide—all products of combustion, and, with the exception of the latter, valueless as fuel. The quantity of carbonic oxide produced is about 2-5 of an ounce, equivalent in heating value to a piece of coal the size of a pea. The effect of this lent in heating value to a piece of coal the size of a pea. The effect of this can easily be imagined. Prof. Fischer, the eminent German chemical engineer, said of all such formulas: 'Such nonsense should not be patentable."

The public is entitled to both sides of the story, since it has awakened so general an interest. The cobbler himself does not seem to be very communicative. The formula given to the public was discovered by some of his friends, and if it is all a take, reporters must be held responsible, for they stated positively "almost every house holder in Altoona is now converting his ashes into fuel, with great saving n coal bills;" also, "the ash-burning compound is now being used in many large industrial and mercantile places here, and it is claimed for it that it has reduced the fuel item more than half." These are positive statements of alleged facts, which, if they were facts, could be, and would be, a matter of general knowledge. There is no excuse for a reporter to send out his

A friend of the "News" suggests that the brokemen of the railroad lines operating in this State, be instructed to call out at all the important railroad stations, where a number of passengers usually get off: "Leave no packages in the car." This, he thinks, would cause the travelers to look around before leaving their seats, and many of the boxes and packages that are now left because forgotten in the excitement of getting off the train, would be taken along. The little extra trouble added to the duties of the brakemen would result in saving the passengers a great deal of annoyance, and the railroads the extra trouble of taking care of lost arti-Wherever he went he was followed. She says that the children skate before school, to school, at the noon recess and in the afterchildren skate before school, to school, at the noon recess and in the afternoon, and while in the school rooms fall asleep at their desks from weariness. It is so in all schools of the city. A quarter of a century ago relier skating was a rage, but it was thought to have died out. This revival is most noticeable.

HISTORY OF "MISS."

Pittsburg Dispatch,

Pittsburg Dispatch,

"Miss" is an abbreviation of "mistress," which, as an English law dictionary explains, is the proper style of the wife of an esquire or a gentleman. By Dr. Johnson's time it had become "the term of honor to a young gir!" In the earlier part of the eighteenth century, however, it was used respectfully of girls below the age of 10 alone. After that age "miss" was rude, implying giddiness of behavior. In Smollett's writings any unmarried woman of mature years, and her maid are both "Mrs." It is curious that "miss" has grown older, so to speak, while "master" has become confined to boys.

THE CANTEEN AND DIVES. New York Evening Post. Advocates of the restoration of the army canteen have found their chief argument in the low dives and grog-series which surround most of the argument in the low dives and grog-geries which surround most of the posts and barracks. "Give us the canteen," they have said, "or you campel our soldiers to go to the low resorts, which contain much worse temptations than strong drink." To this the Evening Post, among others, has replied that sufficient exertions had never been made by the war de-partment and zurrison commanders. has replied that sufficient exertions had never been made by the war department and garrison commanders to induce the local authorities to regulate or drive away the obnoxious salcons. That this was not a counsel of perfection now appears from the action taken by the Illinois legislature in passing a bill forbidding any salcon from doing business within a mile and one-eighth of an army or navy post. This law was obtained by the officers garrisoning Fort Sheridan, and the citizens of High wood, the adjoining town, which has been so disgraced by low salcons as to make it the stock "terrible example" of the canteen advicates. It was a detriment to the morals of the soldiers long before the canteen was abolished. If other states will but follow the Hilnois example, the public will be in a better position to judge whether it really is or is not necessary for the government to supply beer and wine to its soldiers.

A lovely woman of enormous wealth coolly selects a husband as she would a place of brics-brac, and offers him the position with an income of $100,000 a year. It's strictly business; he is a husband in name; in reality he is nothing more than a highly salaried employe to protect her from annoyance, including fortune hunters. But she overlooks the fact that he is handsome and interesting—and that she is a young and impressionable woman. Also oung and impressionable woman. Also here arises dark shadows from his pre-sumably dead past, which further com-blicate matters. It's intensely fascinating, alive, a gay picture of the lives of the idle rich that three quarters of the world love to warch, and has an excit-ing, dramatic fervor in its telling.
