The Greatest Shame.

WASHINGTON, June 8.—The whole tendency of political and social life of the capital is to render simple and honest, and even meek. All the old virtues which were once so much prized and respected have gone out of fashion and the few who still adhere to them are regarded as the scions of a degenerate age. Shady, with its vulgar train, is in the ascendancy in and out of office. This great ambition is to affect the administration and to make it a despotism. It has already signified the despotic and degraded reign of Louis Napoleon, whose motto was bread and the circus. Paris, with all its gilded rottenness, is the extreme form of decadence. Here, too, the greatest, haughtiest, and audacious. No refining grace is visible. It is more exulting in shame, and defiant of all decent and moral principles. The first place everywhere. A man is esteemed for his fortune, his official position, or his influence with power. A woman is regarded for her capacity to control men, and "the qualities of the heart" are of little account. The sterling qualities in the one case and the gentle virtues in the other are of no value in a social market where everything is judged by a standard of greenbacks and real money. The example of the most prominent in public life has necessarily infected the subordinate spheres, until the whole system has become rotten, and depraved.

Even members of the Cabinet, Senators, Representatives, and officers are seen revelling in wealth, who only a few years ago were absolutely poor and ardent. It is easy to understand how the dependants on their favor will follow in the same devious paths and seek to attain position by the same unworthy methods. Success at any price is the predominant spirit, and the end justifies the means, the moral lesson indicated by daily example. Adieu to the principles of the Declaration of Independence! And when this is not possible in a proper way, it is sought by others without regard to the sacrifice of honor or duty.

This fact serves to explain the large number of scandals which have disgraced every branch of the public service. That is to say, worse than that of any other civilian, because one for or another, the highest as well as the lowest places are demolished and controlled by sinister motives or selfish influences.

Without a radical change, there will be no effective remedy. Even if the law enforcement agents, who are the charlatans claim for it in point of efficiency it could produce no more effect as a cure than a common plaster would in extirpating a deadly cancer. The disease is chronic and insidious until the doctor calls heroic treatment.

The plumb of the contingent fund in the departments, while the Senate and House act only upon a part of a prevailing system which reaches from Congress throughout the public service. The contingencies of the Senate and House of Representatives exhibit the most wilful waste of the people's money, and the most flagrant corruption.

It is evident that the scandals were never before even suggested, at a cost of hundreds of thousands.
