Blessed with but little means, yet much ambition and fortitude he made Then came the singer-amid deafen-

his way in an incredibly short time to the front rank in his profession. He was a soul with a single purpose and he made everything bend before it. He lived in an atmosphere of music and his life was attuned to its harmonies. To feel the pressure of his hand, to encounter the warmth and geniality of his smile was like coming into the joyousness of a day in spring-time. One could not be gloomy or morose in his presence. Heaven had blessed him with a gift

Heaven had blessed him with a gift which we fondly hoped would bring not only renown to him, but glory to his Alma Mater and a blessing to the world; and not until he was gone did we feel how much we loved him and how empty will be the place he has kept bright and warm in our hearts. But the Father called him home.

But the Father called him home, and our chastened hearts bow to the will of Him that doeth all things well; and on this sad occasion we turn for comfort to the source of all comfort The next number, 'Pastorale,' was in French so we could only guess at what as going on. It seemed to be a comcomfort to the source of all connort and pray that God's mercy may be richly showered upon the stricken father, mother and relatives. May the hand of time weave from the beauti-ful memories of his life a garland that shall not only veil the wound of plete transition from "Ave Maria such was the bright frolicsome mood of the singer's voice, smile and gesture that one was reminded of Milton's

Working Night and Day,

But this spirit passed and gave place feeling of joy and pride when all sang, in a full, rich, soul-stirring voic "O ye mountains high." and threw I whole heart into the words, "How I longed to your bosom to dee." The audience was deeply moved. How shall one attempt to describe

"Ave Maria," a song which we have heard time and again, both in Latin and English, and striven in vain to get hold of, convinced, though we were, by our musical friends that it is a world Tonight we realized for the -some of us-that the song has a soul; a plaintive, trustful, pathe-tic reaching out of a weary heart on earth to its Mother's heart in heaven. The effect is a curious mingling of sad-gladness or glad sadness, some of the closing notes seemed to float downward like an unvolced benediction.
