BOX ELDER STAKE CONFERENCE.

The Quarterly Conference of Box Elder Stake convened at 10 a. m. Saturday, October 23d, 1886, in the Tabernacle at Brigham City. President O. G. Snow presiding.

The meetings were well attended, and an excellent spirit prevailed during the exercises. Zion's songs and anthems were sweetly rendered by the choir under the able leadership of Prof. S. N. Lee. The speakers were richly endowed with the spirit of God, and delivered instructive and encouraging addresses.

The attention of the Saints was called to the Epistle of the First Presidency, read at the Semi-Annual Conference held at Coalville.

The Most High who rules in the heavens above, and in the kingdoms of men, was besought in humble prayer to shield from the power and cruel vindictiveness of wicked men his aged and faithful servant President John Taylor and his co-laborers in the great work of human redemption.

The business of the Stake was done unitedly. The choir sang an anthem. Benediction was offered and conference adjourned for three months.

JAMES BYWATER, Clerk.

Some Once-Famous Generals.

Gen. Averell, who is at the head of the Averell Conduit Company, is the same Averell who ranked with Custer, Kilpatrick and Pleasanton as one of the dashing, brave and spectacular cavalry commanders of the war. The General has not had a flowery path since the war, but thinks he sees fortune ahead now. He is an elderly, dignified man, thick set, with a pleasing eye and smile, and so gentle in manner that one wonders if he can be the same man who dashed up the Shenandoah Valley so furiously in 1864. Almost every morning he calls at one of the up town hotels for his intimate friend ex-Senator Alexander McDonald, whose business capacity it is that has set the conduit company going in ship-shape manner. Together they go down town. The business career is the last thing General Averell thought of when he quit the army. He was strolling along the streets of Washington some years ago, while the bill to put him on the retired list was pending, and happened to see some men laying an experimental conduit. As he watched them the idea was conceived out of which has grown the company, but General Averell had a bigger struggle to organize it than he did when matching sabers with rebel cavalry on on some of his raids.

General Alfred Pleasanton has recently been spending some days here on purely literary business. No one would take him for a warrior who had won great renown before Sheridan was much known. His lines have not been laid in pleasant places since the war. He is a slender, medium-sized man, somewhat bowed. Gray hair and a white moustache reveal the years that have passed over his head. He is extremely quiet, reserved, but likes to meet old comrades, or to talk over the days of the war with intelligent persons. He never complains that the Government has shown ingratitude, and modestly denies that he saved Hooker's army from utter route and capture at Chancellorville. The General lives a solitary bachelor's life in Washington.

Gen. Abner Doubleday is occasionally seen at the Astor House. No one could be more unmilitary in appearance. He appears more like an agriculturist who has come to the city to see the proper sights. Yet he was the chief of artillery at Gettysburg, and his service of this arm was one of the memorable events of that battle. He is somewhat bowed; his skin is swarthy, made noticeably so by his white mustache and beard. He dresses in plain black, and cares nothing for the cut of his garments. He passes in and out of the crowd at the Astor unknown, and spends much of his time while in the city in rummaging over the books at the second-hand book stores.

A handsome well-dressed, dignified man, Lob is frequently seen in the lobby of the Fifth Avenue, would be taken for a prosperous man of business rather than the General who commanded Burnside's left wing at Fredericksburg. Yet Gen. Franklin has both records. He has flourished since the war better than some of his noted companions in arms. He lives in Hartford, and is successfully interested in manufacturing there. He is a strong Democrat, but declines all of the political honors offered. He prefers to talk with business men on business than with old soldiers about the war. Gen. Franklin carries his years well, perhaps because he has had none of the anxieties and disappointments that have befallen some other Generals who were conspicuous in the field. He is a welcome guest of many of the best houses of New York.

Gen. Wilcox was one of the bravest and most conspicuous of the officers in the Confederate service. As he was seen strolling up Broadway recently, he seemed a man whose life was wholly behind him. He is a short, thick-set man, with a round face and a short, bristling moustache. He has held a minor position among the officers at the Capitol in Washington, and it is a notable illustration of the warlike of time that he has often been obliged to open the door and act as employe to members of Congress who, in the days of the war, were privates or subaltern officers under him. He is treated always with the greatest respect where he is known, but in New York, where he passes by unnoticed he seems to feel lonely and lost.

Little Joe Wheeler has been trying to interest New York capitalists in the development of the rich Alabama lumber districts. Though little Joe is scarcely five feet four in height, and walks with stooping shoulders as though his body were not strong enough for his large head, yet he was ranked with Wade Hamption as one of the most dashing cavalry Generals in the Confederate service. Sherman was always anxious when Wheeler's cavalry was near. For a noted cavalry leader he is the most inoffensive and inconspicuous appearing of men. He is now a member of Congress, and is so short that he is oblized when speaking to mount one of the chairs, or rise to speak from the Clerk's desk. Once while speaking from a revolving chair he gesticulated so violently that he wrested the chair from under him and landed on the floor. He was not at all disconcerted, though his fellow-Congressmen could not help laughing.

An Elephant's Friendship.

Perhaps I should explain to you on the start that my title of "Colonel" was given me when I was an 8-year "child wonder," doing bare-back riding in a well-known circus. At the age of 11, when still at the business, I received a fall which resulted in a broken leg, and I recovered the use of the limb to find that I had imbibed a strong dislike to the saw-dust ring. My father was a ring-master and my mother an equestrienne, and I was about to re-enter the old life—I had, in fact, assisted at two performances—when something occurred to change the routine and bill me for a new profession. We had with us a big, black-skinned elephant named Cato. At that time he was the Junior of the road for size, and he was of such ugly temper that it was hard work for any one to handle him. In two seasons he killed three keepers and crippled two others, and at the time of which I am writing, which was about the 1st of August, he had become so vicious that everybody in the show was warned to look out for him. There were three other elephants along, and they also fought shy of the great brute. Cato would stand and sulk for hours, and he never came out of one of the fits until he had smashed something. If on the highway when one of these ugly spells seized him he would tear down a fence, pull up a tree or attempt to upset some of the wagons.

We had entered the ring for the afternoon performance, when Cato, who had been sulking all day, began to trumpet and scream, and next moment he broke loose from the stake to which he was chained. We had a big audience, and he came into the circus tent laying about him with his trunk in a way to make your hair stand. By sheer good luck everybody got safely out of the way, and Cato pulled down about half the seats. We of the ring sat on our horses as spectators until he made a rush for us. There were five or six of the menagerie men trying to coax or drive him, but the brute suddenly swept them aside and pushed for us. My pony unseated me at the first spring, and, while all others escaped, I was just picking myself up out of the dust when Cato seized me in his trunk. I was too frightened to even cry out. He swung me aloft with a jerk, evidently intending to give me a fling to the right or left, but he suddenly changed his mind. He lowered me to the ground, fondled me a moment with his trunk, and then started for the benches again. As he left me one of the menagerie men flung at my feet an iron hook which Cato's keeper used to fasten in his ear to lead him with, and called to me that I could approach the beast without fear. I picked up the hook and ran over to where he was tearing down the benches, and at the word he desisted. I patted his trunk and spoke kindly to him, and he followed me back to his stake and was secured without trouble.

From that hour I was Cato's keeper, and I can say that for the next three years I was not out of his company for four consecutive hour at any one time. He was so vicious the moment I left him that I had a cot in the menagerie tent in the summer and a room beside his stall in winter quarters. The beast had cost a large sum of money, and was a great draw on the road. It was therefore an object to keep him. Boy as I was, I was paid $2,000 per year as his keeper. Many and many a night I went to sleep on the hay under his feet, and on Sundays I would remove my coat and vest and let him play with me for an hour at a time. He would lift me in his trunk, swing me up and down, toss me ten feet high and catch me with the greatest care, and it came to be a regular thing for all the circus people to gather and see the fun. I taught him to put his fore feet on a pedal and move around; to go lame in a hind leg; to trumpet in imitation of a bugle; to play dead; to beat time with his trunk, and to perform several other tricks, and he was the first "educated elephant" ever seen in a circus ring. He would take food and water from some one else, but it ended there. If any one sought to order him in the least thing he flew into a rage. I had a real affection for Cato, and no human being could have shown me greater care than he did.

We had been three years together, and the fourth had begun when I was taken ill. A fever came on me very suddenly, and I was left with a nurse at a public house in a Pennsylvania village. Cato missed me at once, and the men had all they could do to get him on to the next town. He was chained by both hind feet as soon as the show opened, and he sulked all the afternoon and exhibited symptoms of a coming storm. A suit of my clothes was placed before him and he grew calmer, but when out on the road again and not finding me beside him he could contain himself no longer. When the climax came the circus was watering their horses at a brook. Cato upset three wagons, killed a horse and a camel, and then flung down the fence and rushed across a field and into a piece of woods. All efforts to control him proved futile, and his rage increased until no one dared go near him. After watching him for three days they sent a carriage for me, but I was too ill to be moved. They waited two days longer, and as Cato then began destroying valuable property and blockading travel on the highway, it was determined to kill him. He was a great lover of apples, and a number of them were filled with poison and placed with others where he would find them. A man on horseback rode as near the elephant as he dared go and dropped the apples in a basket, and Cato was eating them five minutes later. Next morning he lay on his side in the ranch, dead and stiff, but it was long weeks after that before they dared break the news to me.—Col. Scott in Detroit Free Press.

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y

By reason of its central position, close relation to principal lines East of Chicago and continuous lines at terminal points West, Northwest and Southwest—the only true Middle-line in the transcontinental system which invites and facilitates travel and traffic in either direction between the Atlantic and Pacific.

The Rock Island main line and branches include Chicago, Joliet, Ottawa, La Salle, Peoria, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Fairfield, Ottumwa, Oskaloosa, West Liberty, Iowa City, Des Moines, Indianola, Winterset, Atlantic, Knoxville, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Centre and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, St. Joseph, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri; Leavenworth and Atchison, in Kansas; Albert Lea, Minneapolis and St. Paul, in Minnesota; Watertown, in Dakota, and hundreds of intermediate cities, towns and villages.

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

Guarantees Speed, Comfort and Safety to those who travel over it. Its roadbed is thoroughly ballasted. Its track is of heavy steel. Its bridges are solid structures of stone and iron. Its rolling stock is perfect as human skill can make it. It has all the safety appliances that mechanical genius has invented and experience proved valuable. Its practical operation is conservative and methodical—its discipline strict and exacting. The luxury of its passenger accommodations is unequaled in the West—unsurpassed in the world.

ALL EXPRESS TRAINS between Chicago and the Missouri River consist of comfortable DAY COACHES, magnificent PALACE PARLOR and SLEEPING CARS, elegant DINING CARS providing excellent meals, and between Chicago, St. Joseph, Atchison and Kansas City—restful RECLINING CHAIR CARS.

THE FAMOUS ALBERT LEA ROUTE

Is the direct, favorite line between Chicago and Minneapolis and St. Paul. Over this route solid Fast Express Trains run daily to the summer resorts, picturesque localities and hunting and fishing grounds of Iowa and Minnesota. The rich wheat fields and grazing lands of interior Dakota are reached via Watertown.

A short desirable route, via Seneca and Kankakee, offers superior inducements to travelers between Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Lafayette and Council Bluffs, St. Joseph, Atchison, Leavenworth, Kansas City, Minneapolis, St. Paul and intermediate points.

All classes of patrons, especially families, ladies and children, receive from officials and employes of Rock Island trains protection, respectful courtesy and kindly attention.
