The first discovery of natural oil springs in Wyoming dates back at least twenty-five years, observes the Deseret News. In 1869, when the Ogallala Indians were still here, the Hawks trail bridle greeves, and a few years later, when he was collected from among the Indians, he had just one small pocket of oil, which he used as a lamp, having no other means of lighting his way.

But the only ones using the past decade that the old beds have attracted any considerable attention, and during the past five years that any boiling has been made for oil. It is only during the past five years that the oil has been taken from the first wells drilled and that wells have been drilled in various places.

The National (Wyo.) Tribune says that the oil in question has about one or two. At the various oil fields there are many oil wells, but they are not being actively developed.

This recent activity, though small, and there has been a great deal of oil produced from the oil wells. About 100,000 gallons of oil have been sold outright by the producers at prices ranging from $1.00 to $1.50 per barrel, net.
