He evinced the quality to a sufficient extent, however, to indicate that he would be a formidable, not to say invincible, opponent in political polemics, where the orator is not bound by legal restraints and formalities.

Although the style of Mr. McDonald differs somewhat widely from that of Mr. Broadhead, each being superb in the distinctness of its particular individuality, it would be difficult, if possible, to find a stronger legal team in the United States. They form what Instances are numerous in which land has increased in value in the space of a few months from a few dollars to several hundred dollars per acre, and the faith rapidity with which the wealth of the region has increased is surprising. Our correspondent refers to the rush with which substantial and costly buildings have been erected, and of enterpri es; but the picture he draws which is being erected at Manti has is a very modest one in comparison with many portrayals of the press ready for the upholstering, furniture, which, however, may be, to some extent, exaggerations.

Mr. Bean neither receives nor expects to receive any personal favors of the "Mormons" except the courtesis in no need of that kind of reward things and who has made which persons of the stripe of his maligner consider the chief object of all human effort, judging others by their own mercenary standard. The gentleman has extensive sheep-raising, mining and other profitable interests n Arizona, his very amiable and interesting family now reside in Wash ngton and he is well known in select financial circles in New York.

He related an incident on his political trip last fall, which is worth reproducing. Traveling from Solomonsville to Fort Bowie, near the Southern Pacific Railroad, he came across two little boys camped on the desert. They were preparing their supper. An old-frying pan held some slices of bacon, an old tin can some coffee, and two other tin cans were for cups. They had a wagon "loaded to the guards" and an eight mule team. Mr. Bean stopped and asked:

"Who are you with, boys?"
"No one, sir," was the reply.
"How old are you?"

'Ten years.' "How old is that other boy?"

"Is he your brother?"

"Where's your fath r?" "Dead. 'And you're mother's widow?"

"Where are you going?"
"Freighting to Bowie." "But you can't load and unload," "Oh, no! They load up on the Gila and the folks un'oad at Bowie." "But, my gracious, your mules are turned out and you can't reach up to harness or put their brides on!"

"Oh, but they all know me, and if I call 'em they'll all come in a minute, and I get up on the wheel and harness "And aren't you atraid to be out here alone on this great desert?

"On! no, we'll be all right."
And the little man smiled with the atmost confidence. Out on a desert in the wilds of Arizona, alone, these "Mormon" boys helping to support a widowed mother left with three other children, were freighting from the Gila to Bowie, 75 miles, with a big eight mule team, and cooking their evening meal, had the most sublime faith and reliance upon God and their own
