Senator Carter remarked that the lumber trust was the result of the ad-ministration of the lieu land laws by the present secretary of the interior. He said that railroads were allowed to exchange large holdings of land in Arizona, from which they had cut the timber, for timbered lands in the northwest, and in this way immense tracts had come under the ownership of a few persons. No action was taken on the Carter resolution, on which the speeches resolution, on which the speeches were based.

"Were not these lands occupied by the vice president spoken of before the reserves were created?" askd Mr. Smoot

"No, a numbr of them were ac-outred while we sat here in the value supposition that we were heading off these land grabbers, while in another branch of the government contracts were being rushed through with all speed that the ink might be dry on them before we passed the act which shut out the exchange of lands," an-iwered Mr. Heyburn. One of the greatest points for criti-cism, said Mr. Heyburn, was that two acres of graning land to one of timber had been withdrawn as forest re-serves.
