IS A LITERARY PRISONER.
Writes an Imaginative Story With a Strong Local Coloring.

Is Entitled "The Mormon Queen," and Endows Mythical Young Lady with Wonderful Power for Doing Good.

Not many prisoners in the Utah penitentiary are endowed with a literary bent. There is one man, however, who has strong inclinations in that direction. He is George W. Walsen, the author of three or four books. Walsen is a young man of good education. In prison his habits have been most exemplary and have had a wholesome effect upon many of the more hardened characters. He has been, during the two years of his incarceration, a very industrious inmate of the institution and on more than one occasion has rendered valuable assistance to the warden and guards. Warden Dow says he believes him to be a reformed criminal and as such thinks him entitled to every legitimate encouragement.

The offense of which Walsen was convicted and sentenced for a period of five years, was forgery, committed, he says, while under an influence produced by the too excessive use of liquor.
Since his incarceration he declares that he has entirely overcome his propensities in this direction, and that he has resolutely determined to lead a better and higher life, a statement that Warden Dow and his aids fully believe. During his incarceration Walsen has devoted the most of his spare time to writing and one of his books, now in the hands of a New York Publishing House, "Why Two and Two Do Not Make Five," is said to be an extremely interesting production.
His latest work, however, is of an entirely different character, comprising 219 pages of typewritten manuscript, and dealing with a wholly mythical subject in a wholly mythical way. He gives it the high sounding title of "The Mormon Queen," and while there is little about it that is "Mormon" in any sense, it appears, nevertheless, to have been written with no unfriendly motives.

The book relates the experience of a young girl, who, endowed with a beautiful voice, goes out into the world and with her gift and the manifestation of a deep love for mankind wins the admiration of the world and triumphs over numerous forms of evil with which she is assailed, the tempters instead of injuring her, being themselves uplifted by her influence. The evident aim of the book is to show the power of love in combating the evil of the world and with such a motive cannot but recommend itself to all who have the good of humanity at heart and have a glimpse of the wisdom inherent in the character of Christ.
The higher thought, which is slowly but surely making itself a potent force in the philosophy abroad in the world, and of which impersonal love is the important factor, the author displays a vivid imagination, the plot being decidedly original. A copy of the manuscript is now under revision by eastern publishers and Mr. Walsen says the sale of a large number of the book has been practically agreed upon in advance.

THE AUTHOR'S INTRODUCTION.
The author's introduction is couched in the following terms: Should the unfriendly "critic" find no other ground for condemnation, than that this "story" is crude, and filled with grammatical errors, the author will be pleased.
Should the friendly "critic" find that there is some merit in the effort, the author will be pleased.
Should the "public" receive the "story" in the same spirit in which it is written, the author will be highly elated.
With "love" to all mankind.

THOUGHT IT WAS A STRIKE.
When City Park Keeper Carl Erickson reached his home last night after his day's work was done he found the men grouped together under a tree upon his lawn. Having no other reason to which he could in any way attribute their gathering, Mr. Erickson thought that the men had a grievance to present on a strike on hand. Councilman Hewlett, however, soon changed the current of these thoughts when he announced to Mr. Erickson that while they were indeed in conspiracy on, it was with no idea of disturbing the peace of mind of the city's park keeper.
Mr. Hewlett reminded his auditor that the employee under him had brought themselves of the fact that their "boss" and that day reached the fiftieth anniversary of his birthday, and as a token of esteem they begged of Mr. Erickson to accept of a fine rocking chair and umbrella, which was then presented.
It was a very pleasant affair and impressed the recipient of the gifts with the thoughtful feelings of the men.

win) of 1621 Oak Street, (San Francisco),

QUALIFICATIONS
OF THE VOTERS.

Registration Lists of the Last City Election to be Used.

WHO ARE THE TAXPAYERS?

Some Questions as to What Citizens are Entitled to Vote at Bond Election Monday.

City Attorney Stephens is of the opinion that in cases where voters have changed their place of residence they will be entitled to vote in the district where they previously resided. The question was asked on account of the coming bond election, and because the conditions involved have arisen since the last regular election. The registration lists to be used are those that were made up for the last city election, and the judges will form their opinion upon the qualifications of a voter after consulting these lists and hearing present conditions of residence. Bonds fide taxpayers only are entitled to vote upon the waterworks bond question, but whether or not a voter must have paid a personal or real property tax, or whether he was qualified through paying a poll tax only, could not be ascertained.
There is now very little time for preparation before the election on Monday, and the people will undoubtedly well consider the needs of the city before going to the polls to decide whether or not the water system shall be put into proper shape to give the citizens adequate service.

Judge Young's Opinion.
Hon. Le Grand Young today said that he thought the money was to be expended in the construction of some permanent improvement in the water system, something that would prove to be of lasting benefit—he was in favor of the bonds. If the expenditures were to be made simply for temporary relief, he would consider it a waste of money and would therefore oppose it. Although he had not read the address of the committees to the taxpayers, he would do so, and if the propositions contained in the address of a permanent nature, he would be in favor of a bond issue to cover the cost.
