When he first entered the cell the assarin wept copious'y and explained the tears and emotion by saying that he was filled with joy at the prospect of the nearness of his relief from his prosecutors. Yesterdsy afterneou, prior to Mre. Scoville's visit to the jail, she sent thim a bouquet, which, without the knowledge of the warden or his deputy, was carled into the cell. Deputy wanden Rush passed through the corridor soon afterward, and noticing the bouquet, asked who had given it to him tass con, when he concluded the bouquet was worthy of examina-tion, and he took it from the cell. It was handed to Dr. McWilliams, the jail physician, who carsfully examined the flowers and decide the so-savin.
