New York, Jan. 22.—A special to the World from Tampa, Fla., says: Maria Teresa Miguel, who has come here from Cuba, having been forced to leave her home near Artemisa, tells a story of great suffering and tortuous treatment at the hands of Spaniards.

She and her husband with a family of five, two boys and three girls, lived ten miles from Artemisa. They had a plantation of 400 acres and employed more than 100 hands on the place.

Gen. Weyler's first order forced all the white men off. Almost daily bands of Spanish troops would slip through the forest and kill and maim, and then return to their homes, leaving the families in terror.

They fled to the mountains, but were followed by the Spaniards, and even tortured. One day Maria Teresa's little boy was killed. She was then taken to a place called "El Campesino," where she was kept in a cage with other women.

Other raids were made and one day her husband was killed before her eyes. She was then taken to a place called "El Campesino," where she was kept in a cage with other women.
