KEEP THE PIG WORKING .- In he flush times through which we have passed, many villagers ceased to make their own pork, and even upon the farm, near good markets, it has been a question whether there was any profit in keeping pigs. in the old time it was a main resource, and the corncrib and the pigsty were as indispensible as the barn and the cowyard. The best Hart J manure made on the farm was the contents of the siye. It made its mark upon the cornfield, and the effects were seen for years after in the oats and grass. After many years of experience with home made manure and the manufactured article, we have come to the conclusion that no cultivator can afford to dispense with the labors of the pig as a manufacturer of fertilizers. It is the most satisfactory way of filling the pork barrel and the lar-der, even if there be little economy

Swine pay largely in mixing and compositing the contents of the barn cellar that receives the manure of the cattle kept in thestable above. We have noticed this feature in the management of the most thrifty farmers recently visited. Pigs are kept at work from their birth to their slaughter. All refuse from the farm and garden however, lives in a more important and enduring record than the pages of mere book history—in the hearts and affections of a great geople, who will ever tenaciously cheriah his memory.
