the late President, Bishop Leonard said "I know it has been said that th golden rule has no place in politics, but if it hasn't, then woe be to politics. We know, of course, that politics are corrupt, but it is because people them selves are corrupt. As it is true that water will not rise higher than it source, so also it is true that political sentiment will not rise higher than the great moral sentiment of the peo ple who create it. It is, therefore, the part of every political man to do his part in moulding the right sentiment of which we speak. The members of the Retail Clerks association are indignant against the employers who have signed a paper to do away with the half-holiday the summer season, and think they might be in "better business." One employer, for the other side, claims the half-holiday business breaks right into the busiest season of the day, and that it would be better to have a whole holiday than to have a broken day. While the matter has not settled as yet, still it is believed that the haif-holiday scheme is a relict of the misty past, and there is great regret thereat.
