A GLORIOUS VICTORY.

It was a great victory. When the Home to write another day, this time depicting in vivid word-painting the death of Commodore Dewey in the Philippines. Where is the poet to immortalize the glorious exploit of modern heroism, braving at sea another the thunderbolt of Jupiter, as it were, instead of the primitive spear and bow? The naval battle off Manila was an epoch in the history of the United States.

The full details have not yet arrived, but judging from the accounts published, the victory of the American squadron was by no means a very easy one. The Spaniards, it seems, were equal in numbers and equipment, if not superior to the attacking force. They had selected a well protected position and were supported by the batteries on shore. They were brave and determined, keeping up the fight until impossible odds were against them. Yet, the brave Commander Dewey all but annihilated them in a few hours. It must have been a grand spectacle, awe-inspiring, terrible. What the loss of life and ships was great, but it is to be doubted, that the whole story has not yet been told. When all is known, the valor, the daring, and the loyalty of our sailors will be fully appreciated. If we read dispatches current, it is evident the victory was not a cheap one.

Those interested in the naval affairs of the world have anxiously been looking for an event of this kind. They wanted to see modern engines of destruction at work in earnest, so as to be able to judge of their practical value for defense and attack. Doubts have frequently been expressed as to the utility of the complex machines of modern modern marine combat. The battle has taken place and the questions involved are presented to the world for critical solution.

One lesson stands forth with unmistakable clearness above the smoke and din of this engagement, and that is this, that the personal qualities of the men, that spirit in battle, count for everything, now as in ancient days. Physical and intellectual superiority decide wars now, as much as in the days of the pike and bow. The Spanish admiral, called, was a man of no account, that his first kept the American ships moving all the time, unaccountably apparently of the fact that this was part of the tactics of our commander for the purpose of reaching the aim of the enemy less certain. And yet, who can tell to what extent the glorious victory was due to this simple maneuver? In the battle off Yalu between the Chinese and Japanese, the former had a numerically somewhat stronger force, but the Japanese commander by a detestable movement succeeded in getting out of range of about half of the opposing armada, then attacking one-half at a time and destroying it. Modern engines of war are truly wonderful machines, but they are ineffective only when controlled by the still more wonderful intellect of forces with which man has been endowed.

An early effort of the victory of Commodore Dewey is none other than European interference in the current between the United States and Spain. Such interference can hardly be regarded in this country with feelings of unqualified satisfaction. It all depends on what form it takes, and on the pressure on Spain to yield to the just demands of the United States would be all right, but if some of the European powers approach the question under the impression that, in dealing with the United States they have another Turkey or Japan to dabble before, it might be considered necessary, now while we are at it, to dispel that illusion. In our own interest, as well as that of others, then serious complications might arise.

THE STRAITS SETTLEMENTS.

The Straits Settlements is the collective name given to the British possessions on the Malay peninsula which comprise into the Chinese archipelago of western part of Borneo, with the Malay Peninsula on the other side, the most important gateway between India and China. These settlements comprise of the island of Singapore, where the government seat is the town and residence of the Governor, the territory and islands of the Dindings, the island of Penang and the island of Malacca. The settlements are transferred to the Straits Settlements in 1846. The Governor is appointed for five years and is assisted by an executive council. The settlements are divided into three districts: Singapore, Malacca, and Penang. The settlements are the most important of the Malay Peninsula. It is situated 11 miles long and 11 broad. It is separated from the peninsula by a strait less than half a mile wide at the narrowest point. The only town in the settlement in the city of Singapore, the capital of the Straits Settlements. It is a picturesque, picturesque town with a large European population. It is probable that as events in the Philippines develop the interest here mentioned will become more familiar to the American public. It is a small island, but it is the only one in the Malay Peninsula which is under the control of the United States.
