

LONDON STAGE NEWS.

Special Correspondence.

LONDON, June 2.—There is decided "something doing" on the part of Americans in the London theatrical world at present. To begin with, a lively competition is on between Charles Frohman, "Jake" Shubert and one or two other Transatlantic managers who are now in town for the American rights in some of the season's big successes, which, it may be remarked, are comparatively few in number. The Schuberts have, of course, arranged to present Lena Ashwell in the adaptation of "The Shalunko," which has scored so emphatically at the Savoy, but as yet there will be no definite word regarding "The Spring Chickadee" and "The Dairymaids," the two London musical comedies over which the American bidding is said to be brisk at present. The first of these has now run for 340 nights, and is still going strong, though its successor is being talked of, and the latter has caught the town unmistakably by virtue of a newly discovered comedy, Dan Hoagland, who will be sure to "make good" in the United States, on account of a really novel genre, the "gymnasium wherein Gertrude" who has a song called "The Singsong Girl"—and about a score of other comely damsels, do some attractive "sings."

One of the latest "girls"—"The Girl Behind the Counter"—will also be counted for the United States, but it is not probable that there will be any direct struggle over the plays without exception are now on view at London theaters—for the excellent reason that the successes among them are nearly all American—witness Kester's "Dorothy of the Hall," Kist's "John and the House," Presby's "Raffles," and "The Acres," the latter of which, though hailed some too kindly by the critics, seems to be doing well at the Waldorf.

Meanwhile, Michael Morton's experiment of dramatizing "The Newcomes" as by Beecher's Tree, has also been justified by success, and this is a triumph in its way, both for the American dramatist and the actor. There is, of course, always more or less antagonism ready to hand for an American adaptation of an English classic, and in this case the situation had been prejudiced to start with by a much-discussed newspaper article, which protested not only against the play, but against "The Newcomes" by the author of "The Little Stranger," but against Mr. Tree's appearance as Thackeray's

"GIRLS FROM UTAH" ON LIVERPOOL STAGE

Special Correspondence.

LIVERPOOL, May 21.—"The Girls From Utah, or the Gold Diggers" is the title of a three act comic opera occupying the boards of the Royal Court Theatre all this week. A fetching title certainly, for Utahians, and it is needless to say that the entire Liverpool contingent of that persuasion were in evidence on the opening night to see if the "Salt Lake Daughters" were anything like the real article. The piece is a new one, and while advertised as a comic opera, musical comedy would better describe it. On the whole it furnishes a pleasant evening's entertainment, and while it could hardly be rated first class, a number of catchy songs and dainty dances keep it from going below the line of mediocrity. The plot is new and original, so far as we know and briefly stated is as follows: An Englishman, named Brewgood, proprietor of the miners' rest, in the mining district of Kangaroo, Queensland, runs a matrimonial agency in connection with his "pup." Eight handsome young miners work in the vicinity, supposedly single, but in reality all married, having left their better halves in civilization. In order that they might make a fortune in the goldfields and incidentally get a little respite from the wear of the matrimonial state. Thinking of spring an agreeable surprise on the lonely (C) young men and turn an honest penny at the same time. Brewgood sends to Salt Lake for eight young widows. The act begins just as the widows are expected, but before their arrival the eight wives of the lonely (C) young men appear upon the scene. When Brewgood hears that the mines are not single men, he is, in the language of the poet, "up a tree," and his troubles are not lessened when the woman for whom he has advertised for a wife turns out to be his true wife who has left in England. With her is her daughter, Mildred, who has come to Australia to find a lover who has left her to make his fortune. About the love affairs of these two the main plot revolves. The meeting of the wives and husbands is not a very enthusiastic one, and after rather a stormy scene the latter make their escape for the time being. The next event is the arrival of "The Girls From Utah," and so sweet and dainty was their appearance that one could hardly help wishing they were really from the homeland. All were dressed precisely alike in costumes of purple and grey, hats after the fashion of New York's style, black "bob" crests and stockings of blue-grey. They entered with a modest step, their eyes lowered demurely, looking more like stage representations of Quaker misses than anything else. Their introductory song informed the audience that they were "the girls from Utah," "Salt Lake's daughters," and "the widows of Hyrum Buckle," and that they wanted a home all by themselves that they "never would share with anyone else," etc., etc. Things are moving along nicely, when a stormy interview occurs in which he tells them that their husbands-to-be are already married, and that their only hope lies in capturing someone else. The young miners put in an appearance at this juncture, and there ensues a hurried rush for them on the part of the widows. Each of the latter "corners" a young man, and ere long they all succumb to the captivating manners of the "girls from Utah." Things are moving along nicely, when the widows appear upon the scene, and a scene to the great discomfiture of the recent husbands. A battle royal between the wives and widows ensues which is extremely amusing, and the combatants only separate when the matrimonial agent announces to be made a target for the widows' disappointment. As the plot develops, an effort is made to marry the widows to every man that comes within hailing distance, which provides opportunities for many laughable situations. The fact that they are to have $50,000 apiece if they all marry the same man does not make them any more marketable, but they are finally palmed off on Alphonse, the French green grocer who has made several unsuccessful attempts to find a wife through Brewgood's agency. While several suggestive incidents occur, the piece is singularly free from coarse allusions to the Latter-day Saints, and one feels that it entirely deserves credit for refraining from introducing the objectionable features which others have adopted when treating the subject. RUFUS D. JOHNSON.

SALT LAKERS IN GOTHAM.

Special Correspondence.

NEW YORK, June 11.—The American Medical association, which meets once a year, and which held its last convention in Boston during the past week, brought many prominent physicians from the west, to take part in its exercises. Dr. Stauffer and Beers, with their wives, came from Salt Lake, and with them Mrs. Sarah Dinwoodey and her granddaughter, Miss Evelyn Moyle; all made the trip down to New York, locating at the Grand Union hotel on Forty-second and Fourth avenues. Dr. Stauffer and wife expect to leave for Washington today; Dr. and Mrs. Beers will possibly remain a day longer and then join their friends in the capital, where all will visit for a few days, and Mrs. Dinwoodey and Miss Moyle will remain in New York for a week or 10 days, sight-seeing and visiting with friends; it is young Miss Moyle's first visit to the east, and her friends will see that she enjoys it thoroughly. Miss Van Cott and her sister, Miss Nora Van Cott, daughters of Hon. Waldemar Van Cott, have been in the city visiting with their grandmother, Mrs. Laura Van Cott, and their aunt, Miss Lucy Van Cott. Their cousin, Miss Foy, is also a visitor of the household, and all have been working little excursions to places of interest for the last few days. The Misses Van Cott left for Welles college to be present at commencement exercises, and many of their friends among college girls will be met there. They will return to New York before going west. Monday last saw the reappearance of Miss Mina Taylor among her friends; for two weeks she had been a patient at the J. Hood Wright hospital, on west One Hundred and Thirty-first street, having undergone an operation for appendicitis. The condition of Miss Taylor's health was regarded as serious for some time before she decided, on the advice of her physician, Dr. John Sharp, to enter the hospital. The operation was most successful, and she is greatly improved in health since her return home. Tuesday evening, Miss Taylor and her two sisters, Mrs. Theodora Nystron and Miss Jennie Taylor, with Miss Ida Mitchell, will leave for a two-days' visit in Washington and Chicago, before going on to Utah. The work done by Miss Taylor in Teachers' college, Columbia, has been of an excellent character, she having received markings among the highest in her class—that of the kindergarten department. Miss Ida Mitchell, who has been a member of the Utah colony for a few weeks, will be greatly missed by those who remain here, and the general wish is that they may repeat the visit at some not too distant time.

Mrs. Reuben Clark and children also leave this week for the west; they, in company with their sister, and aunt, Miss Ida Mitchell, will visit in the capital for a few days before going on to Utah. Mrs. Clark has so long been a resident of this city that her departure from our circle will be keenly felt. There is a possibility of Mr. Clark's returning to New York with his family at some future time, and the wish is general that it may be the coming winter. Miss Savage, who makes occasional trips to the metropolis in the interest of art, is always a welcome addition to the home colony, her talent for drawing is well known, and if her health permitted she would make a name among art circles that would reflect credit on herself and her people. Mrs. Clark and Miss Savage have visited with Mrs. Fisher and her home in Park Washington before leaving for the west.

Last Sunday, at chapel services, Mrs. Annie Ferguson, who went west last October, returning a short time ago, spoke on her experience in the great San Francisco earthquake and fire. Mrs. Ferguson is still remaining in Salt Lake, but the high altitude greatly affected her health, and she journeyed to California, in the hope of being benefited, but was obliged to return to her home in New York, where she will remain for the present. Mrs. Ferguson has always been an active member in the Latter-day Saints Church here, and she was warmly welcomed back.

Mr. and Mrs. E. O. Jones of Murray called a week ago for Vienna, Austria, where the doctor will take a post graduate course, expecting to be absent a year and a half. While in this city, Mr. and Mrs. Jones registered at the Hotel, Twenty-ninth and Broadway, and were visited by friends here—Miss Larson and Miss Swenson, students in Teacher's college, Columbia. The clever actor, Walter Perkins, well known in Salt Lake theatrical circles had a most thrilling experience in the San Francisco disaster; he and his company, playing "Who Goes There," lost everything in their trip. Mr. Perkins, who is an expert telegraph operator, was able to attach himself to Gov. Pardee's staff, and in this connection received a badge as a special officer, the number 23, corresponding to the number of people in his play. Another little lady stranger appeared at the home of Mrs. Gladys F. Edwards last Tuesday. Mrs. Edwards is the daughter of the late James S. Ferguson and his wife, Mrs. Louise Young Ferguson. The little girl, now 17 years of age, is the daughter of Mrs. Edwards at 152 West One Hundredth street. Mr. Miles Romney of Z. C. M. L. carpet department and his wife are here on business and pleasure combined. Mr. A. H. Woodruff is also here, and all are stopping at the Herald Square hotel. From Ogden, Mr. Albert Seweroff is here on business for his firm, and Mr. William Patrick, who also represents the big house, bears him company. On Wednesday, at the New York university, on University Heights, Dr. Gill Richards received his diploma from the president of the institution, and the end of his signature. Dr. Gill has been a friend of mine who was glad to know he so successfully passed his examination; at present he is on the J. Hood Wright staff, but will leave Salt in two weeks to work in the founding hospital and from there to one of the other well known hospitals of the city. In August Dr. Richards may go west for a visit; his plans are still indefinite but wherever he decides to locate friends will be glad to hear of him. His devotion to the Utah friends in New York has endeared him to every one, and the best wishes of his admirers go with him always.

Mrs. Francis Pyror and her daughter, Maudie, leave for Saratoga, Tuesday, June 12, to remain for two months, during the extremely hot weather. On Thursday June 7, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas E. Cutler left for the west. They have visited in Boston for some time, and have made their daughter's home in Brooklyn their headquarters. Mrs. J. G. McQuarrie presented her husband with a 10-pound boy Saturday morning; the entire mission feels an interest in the youngster, who seems able to make his way in the world, if the strength of his lungs is any indication. Mother and babe are progressing finely. At Teachers' college, Columbia university, the fine arts exhibit, which has just closed has been judged the best yet given. Prof. Arthur Dow, who is at the head of this department, secured as special critic, Prof. Ernest Fenolosa, who is one of the best acknowledged critics of our time. His Japanese work and criticisms are world-wide known. The professor has his own peculiar mark for successful work, which is a circle, and we are happy to write that Miss Aretta Young of the Brigham Young university, who has been a pupil of Prof. Dow the past year, secured the greatest number of circles from the great critic. Her friends rejoice in her success, and best of all is the fact that her teachers are pleased with the award. Miss Young has been too ill the past six weeks to attend her school regularly, and great was her surprise when Prof. Fenolosa declared to her teachers that he wished to develop her talent, as he was assured there was a future for her in art work. THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

A man recently approached the proprietor of a stall in one of the markets of Washington, with the request that he be allowed to put a card in a conspicuous place. "What is the card?" was the reply, and when, upon investigation, it was found to be the announcement of an excursion of the Lipitor Doctors' association of the district, a proprietor refused, saying, most emphatically, "No, sir, there is no place on my stall for any liquor dealers' notice," and later, in relating the circumstances to the superintendent of the market it was ascertained that the man had applied to many others, if not all of the men having stalls in the market, and every one had refused to allow it space; "and," said the superintendent, "if they had allowed it I should have torn them down."

The candidate for official position in Tennessee, who does not sing a clear note on the liquor question may as well begin to gather up his baggage for a journey up Salt river—Nashville American.

A course of scientific lectures for the study of alcoholism has been instituted in Berlin, Germany, backed by government encouragement. An audience of 400 greeted the inauguration of the course. Certain careful examinations and experiments in public schools in Berlin, Vienna and Brunswick have returned indubitable proof that children given more or little liquor recalled the best reports, while those who receive the same regularly or several times a day were poor scholars. In the higher schools 90 per cent of the scholars consume alcoholic beverages daily.

ORGANIZED TO DRINK.

The United Societies for Local Self-Government is the name under which a certain element of old-world men in Chicago have organized themselves to oppose and overthrow if possible, all restriction upon the sale of intoxicants at places of public amusement. "The 60 members of the executive committee," according to the newspaper report, "represent the Germans, Scandinavians, Hungarians, Irish, Bohemian, Polish, and all other nationalities resident in Chicago, which approve of a foaming tincture of beer or a glass of ale for those who like it at a picnic or a dance." The business manager of the Free Press is said to be one of the leaders in this movement. Mr. Michaelis said to a Chicago Tribune representative: "In forming this political organization we expect to put ourselves in a better position to ask the city council to grant bar permits whenever they are asked by reputable organizations. It is unjust to cut off the great population of foreign extraction from the customs which are a part of their social life, and which do not interfere with the peace of the community. I believe that as a whole the churches are with us. I believe that a poll of the clergymen of Chicago would prove it."

What the Free Press representative says in Chicago indicates what a large per cent of the foreign born citizens the country over are thinking and saying. Shall we not take alarm? Shall we not renew every well tested method of meeting these conditions and pray God to open our eyes to new methods? We who live in the city by the lake sound the alarm again and again and argue relative to the flow into Michigan waters of sewage that means disease, if not death, to those who drink the city water. God knows the American flag is not wholly quitted, but shall we not at least strenuously endeavor to check the deadly influx of immoral sentiment and custom from other lands? For just as the death of the American flag is of Christian citizenship was called into being. Shall she not carry herself courageously and win her way for the right?
