

ASK AQUEDUCT FOR CITY CREEK

Residents Meet to Protest Against Continued Neglect From City Council.

DANGER FROM HIGH WATER.

It Will Not be Over Until Proper Channel is Made to Prevent Overflow on to the Street.

The residents of North Temple street assembled at the sixteenth ward assembly hall last evening, and proceeded to express their convictions as to the present "American" city administration. The meeting was well attended and several of the speakers did not hesitate to tell what they thought of a city government that would permit their property to be damaged and some of it ruined by the floods which overran that district a short time ago.

During the course of the remarks of Councilman Fernstrom, who tried to pour oil on the troubled waters by promising to do all he could to get the council to adopt remedial measures, it developed that the previous administration had appropriated $15,000 to strengthen the banks of City creek and protect the residents from floods, but the incoming council had failed to carry out the improvements. Nothing has ever been heard of the money appropriated for this purpose, and the residents of that portion of the city would like somebody to explain.

TO PETITION COUNCIL.

A committee was appointed to carry the matter before the city council, and ask for the construction of an aqueduct, cemented on side and bottom, to take care of the waters of City creek between Fourth and Ninth West streets. The sense of the meeting was that property owners along the line of the ditch should not be compelled to spend money for this necessary protection to property, as in their judgment City creek was purely city property and should be regulated and controlled by the city. The committee appointed consisted of the following residents of the locality: G. H. Backman, George R. Emery, E. Rich, W. J. Newman and E. H. Davis. The meeting was presided over by G. H. Backman, and E. L. Pollard acted as secretary.

TO LIGHT VIADUCT.

Another matter engaging the attention of the meeting was the dangerous condition of the Oregon Short Line viaduct, constructed over lower North Temple street. The viaduct was situated at night and dangers of various kinds lurk in its precincts after the shades of night fall down. Several cases of narrow escapes from serious injury were recounted by those present, and while the committee was not charged with the presentation of this matter to the council, as help entire effort is to be made to the city, the matter of securing the desired improvements on City creek, yet the necessity for lighting the viaduct seems imperative, and should receive the attention of the city officials.

THE LAW AND MINORS.

Juvenile Court Cannot Try Boys or Girls Charged With Felony.

Attorney General Breeden gave out the following opinion today, in reply to a query from County Attorney Pickett of St. George as to the jurisdiction of district courts over children under 18 years of age:

"In reply to your inquiry with reference to the arrest and trial of children 18 years of age and under, for burglary or other felonies, you are advised that the act creating a juvenile court and defining its jurisdiction does not confer upon it jurisdiction to try persons charged with a felony, but section 3 as well as section 6 of said act distinctly withhold jurisdiction in such cases.

"The youth referred to in your communication as being guilty of burglary should be at once arrested and taken before a committing magistrate and bound over to await the action of the district court. And further, you are advised that the other courts under the statute which have hitherto possessed and exercised jurisdiction over the violations of the criminal statutes of the state have not been deprived of such jurisdiction, and in the absence of juvenile courts, all offenders should be taken before the magistrate within his precinct and dealt with according to law."

SANPETE ROAD CHANGES HANDS

Eastern Syndicate Takes Over Line and Coal and Quarry Properties.

A syndicate of eastern and local men has taken over the Sanpete Valley railway, the Sterling Coal & Coke company and Nebo Stone company. This was learned today, and while minute details are lacking, it is known that the holdings, rights of way, franchises and all other possessions of the three companies mentioned have been secured outright. The purchase price was not made known. The new company will take hold Monday.

Among the local men identified with the enterprise are T. H. Fitzgerald, J. Y. Smith, and William D. Livingston. One of the eastern men is F. R. Coates of the Wallace-Coates Construction company, of Chicago. Mr. Wallace of the firm mentioned was once chief engineer of the Panama canal.

Until a meeting of the new company has been held, to elect officers, Mr. Coates will be acting manager.

The Sanpete Valley railway runs from Nephi to Manti, a distance of 52 miles. While those interested say they cannot announce any definite plans of the company so soon, they assert that the entire line is to be practically reconstructed, and ties and rails have been already ordered for this purpose. It is certain that the Sterling Coal and Nebo Stone fields are to be opened on a large scale by the new company, and the road will be enlarged and extended to meet the increased demands of the near future.

J. W. Young was president and U. L. Hickey secretary of the old company, which included in its personnel several English capitalists.

To feed the world is a mighty big proposition and it would be to anybody who tried to tackle it unless it was the McDonald's chocolates that would feed you were furnishing for the tickling of the palates.

In that event it would be a much easier task for the reason that the world would be coming to you to get soft nothings down its sweet tooth way.

The J. G. McDonald Candy Company of Salt Lake feed a world of people and there are more who are crying for them. When they get one meal of the delicious whipped cream chocolates which are the exclusive product of the house there is no holding them until they have been placed on the regular meal list as it were of the house.

The branch of the house in this city is at 802 South Spring Street. It has been in business but a year here and in that time has made itself popular in all parts of the Southern California Territory where it has penetrated with its delicious confections.

The products of the McDonald house are the purest which are turned out in the country. The house is known all over the Western field by the goods which it sells and has already established a large trade in this city and in Southern California.

It makes a specialty of the Whipped cream chocolates and there is no better candy made in the West than these. The trade mark of the company is a world being fed chocolates. The house manufactures all varieties of chocolates and bon-bons and has one of the most complete plants in the country for manufacturing the purest and best of confections.

The local manager of the company is C. R. Pike, who has succeeded in bringing the water to the mouths of the people of Los Angeles with the tempting chocolates and the demand for them is only beginning to be felt. The local branch of the company has already proved too small for the business which has been built up here in the short space of time in which they have been making the acquaintance of the sweet-tooths of the Southern California people and it is expected that larger quarters will soon have to be erected to take care of the trade.

Louis M. Carpenter of Park City has purchased an interest in the real estate business of A. J. Birrell. Mr. Carpenter has disposed of his Park City business and has believed so thoroughly in the future of Salt Lake that he is going to limit himself entirely to laboring here. J. W. Carpenter, his brother, also of Park City, is now building through Mr. Birrell a large dormitory in the eastern part of the city for the use of university students. This building will be completed by Sept. 1, and will cost $45,000.

evidences of which are the Theater, the great Tabernacle and the greater Temple, of Salt Lake City. The Lion House, the Beehive and the Cardo houses were built by him, and it was in the historic Lion house, on the 29th of August, 1877, that the great leader breathed his last.

WILL LIVE ALWAYS.

A mere glimpse, this, at the life and character of Utah's illustrious founder. You who would peruse him more fully, pore over the annals of Mormonism during its first half century; you who would behold his works, look around you—that are manifest on every hand. He was the beating heart, the thinking brain, the directing hand, in all the wondrous work of Utah's development, and the development to a large extent of the surrounding states and territories. Brigham Young needs no biographer; his record is imperishably written upon the minds and hearts of thousands of who loved him, who were his benefactor and friend. He needs no monument of marble or bronze. His name and fame are forever enshrined in the temple of history, in the pantheon of memory, in the Westminster Abbey of the soul.

"He loved his people; their high destiny. Will be a monument to Brigham Young."

GOV. CUTLER'S TRIBUTE.

Loyalty to the Union Was the Wish of Brigham Young.

Gov. Cutler, who had been invited to speak at the reunion, delivered the following address:

"It is entirely fitting that the governor of this great and wonderfully prosperous state should join in doing honor to the man through whose greatness of mind and far-sighted policy this state has been made possible; and who as a first territorial governor did so much and did it so well, to shape the destiny of the commonwealth. I am glad to have the opportunity given me to pay my feeble tribute of appreciation to the constructive genius and statesmanship of Brigham Young."

"The progress of the world, the chronology of history, is measured not so much by mere events, as by epochs and the men who make them. The lives of great men are the true milestones of history. Events repeat themselves; they are shaped by acts and by circumstances, over and over again in different ages. But the life and work of a great man occur but once. It is not repeated. It is an epoch in itself. In every one there is a freshness and an individuality that can never be lost, and is never reproduced."

THE MAN OF THE HOUR.

"Each great man shapes and fits an epoch to which he is peculiarly and exclusively adapted. Each has his own work to do, a work that is partly given to him, and partly produced by him. The man does much to make the hour. The hour does much to make the man. In the presence of God neither is an accident. Shakespeare has said that 'each man in his life plays many parts.' But they are all parts of the same character. Each man is a character that no man but him could display; his work to other men could do as well as he, into that epoch no personality but his own could perfectly fit."

"The man whose birth we celebrate today was a striking example of this principle. He made an epoch and was made by it. He was a great man; an opportunity; and as he became greater, it largely created him. His greatness consisted in the fact that he grew with and shaped the events in which he participated. They were never too big for him; he was always well suited to them. In his case the man and the hour were commensurate."

STERN NECESSITY.

"It was perhaps not more by his choice than by stern necessity that the people he led came to this region. The words of George A. Smith, often repeated, were probably the truest expression of the reason for their coming here: 'We came willingly because we were obliged to.' But when the stern necessity arose, and the choice seemed final between the murderous mob and the barren waste, Brigham Young rose strongly and firmly to the occasion, and made the opportunity his. If in a way it was forced upon him, he accepted it and made the most of it. We can not conceive of him without the particular events that made him famous. At the same time, we can not think that those events were never too big for him; he was always well suited to them. In his case the man and the hour were commensurate."

FATE OF GREAT MEN.

"It has always been the fate of great men to be misunderstood and maligned, even by some of their associates. But a general principle can be laid down for all such cases, and that is that those who misunderstand them are almost always inferior; those who malign them are always inferior to them. It is a principle that does not fail of application in the case of Brigham Young. He was most admired by those who could most nearly measure up to his standard. His maligners and enemies were chiefly those who because of immeasurable inferiority failed to understand him. Who mistook his genius for directing men, for tyranny; his religious fervor for fanaticism; and his financial ability for avarice. In their eyes, his consummate ability as a creator and director of a commonwealth and its destiny, was obscured by lesser traits which they mistook for dominating traits, because they would have dominated a man of weaker will."

SURROUNDED BY GREAT MEN.

"This is one reason for the fact that Brigham Young was surrounded and supported in his work by men of great ability; and this in spite of the enmity shown by others of his acquaintances. We can scarcely think of him without remembering Hiram C. Kimball, Willard Richards, the two Pratts, George A. Smith, Erastus Snow, Lorenzo Snow, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff and others of similar ability and adaptability. In the work of pioneering they were not only able men in the work at hand; but they understood and appreciated their great companion, Brigham Young, and regarded his work from the same standpoint as he himself."

"As for the problems Brigham Young had to solve, they were numerous and varied, and of supreme importance. It is not often in the history of the world that one man has been confronted with so many. And there are few men who have had so good a grasp of their problems, or have solved them so promptly and so well. This is as high a tribute of praise as can be bestowed on any man."

THE BIGGEST PROBLEM.

"Perhaps the largest and most important single problem that confronted Brigham Young and his associates was the problem of self-sustenance. It is the element of their early life here which interests me most, because it is the question living at the root of the growth of this state, not only past but future. Industrial independence is one of the strongest assurances of the stability and permanence of a state. It was always the aim of Brigham Young to make the people self-sustaining. And work in this direction was not only made necessary by their long distance from outside help, but it was prompted by the worthy purpose of making the coming state a producer above its capacity as a consumer. This may be said to sum up the wish of Brigham Young in this respect.

"It is still the wish of Utah's best citizen, if the early settlers founded manufactures and promoted internal industry, it is as much the duty of present and future citizens to build on the foundation they established. If that is the policy that has made the nation great and powerful, it will do the same for the state. I am sure I voice the earnest desire of every citizen of Utah, when I say that it is our worthy aim to see that our state continues to be in loyalty to the Union and in internal prosperity and independence, the peer of all the other states. This was the wish of Brigham Young; it is still the desire of Utah's loyal and industrious people."

DROWNED IN THE PAYETTE RIVER

Portland, Or., May 31.—A special to the Evening Telegram from Boise, Ida., says:

While attempting to make a landing above the rapids in Payette river, about 12 miles from Garden valley, seven men were drowned last night. The two boats which they were using were carried over the rapids and swamped. The other nine occupants of the boats had a hard battle for their lives, but managed to reach shore. The drowned men are:

Bert Ire.
Met Curtis.
Joe Hamilton.
Tom Highland.
Frank Fitzgerald.
Dave McMillan.
Joe Boden.

So far as can be learned all are unmarried men. The force of 16 men in the two boats were engaged in a log drive for the Idaho White Pine Milling company. After portaging a large fall, the first boat attempted to land and tie up for the night at the head of one of the rapids. It failed to make the landing and the boat was swept down the second boat followed the first, the occupants thinking their comrades had passed the rapids safely and were also swamped by the torrent.

The news of the tragedy reached here by telephone from Garden Valley, to which place the survivors hastened, none of the bodies has been recovered yet.

Saturday, June 1st, as previously announced, McDonald enforced a new rule prohibiting visitors from going through his vast Chocolate factory.

In taking the step McDonald is simply protecting his own interests.

His plant has now grown to such proportions that it is imperative that certain valuable secret processes of Chocolate making be safe guarded.

The various branches of the great McDonald factory are now under the supervision of able chocolate specialists, engaged at heavy expense, two of whom are from Holland.

The newest machinery for chocolate making is about ready to be put in place.

Friday the day before the rule barring visitors became effective, there was a steady stream of spectators in the factory, inspecting every phase of the interesting processes.

Visitors are always welcome at the office.
