

THE DISTRICT COURT.

Ex-Superintendent of Waterworks Ryan on Trial for Embezzlement.

A JURY WAS UNABLE TO AGREE.

Losses from and John Brown awarded $11,000 in the Suit.

The trial of W. H. Ryan, ex-superintendent of waterworks for Salt Lake City, upon the charge of embezzlement, was resumed today before Judge Brown and a jury after adjourning on Monday.

The prosecution claims that Ryan, during the year 1904, had certain bills from the water works of Salt Lake City, amounting to $11,000, which he had not paid, and that he had used the money for his own purposes.

The defendant now asks that the jury should find him not guilty, and that he should be allowed to go on his own bond. The jury, however, is unable to agree on a verdict.

The trial is expected to continue for several more days, as the jury has not yet reached a decision on the charges against Ryan.

The case is one of the most important in the history of the water works of Salt Lake City, and the outcome will have a significant impact on the future of the utility.

The jury is expected to return its verdict by the end of the week, and the court will then proceed with any necessary sentencing.

The case has attracted considerable public attention, and the trial is being closely followed by the press and the general public.

The defendant's attorney is making a strong case for his client, arguing that the charges are unfounded and that the jury should acquit.

The prosecution, on the other hand, is presenting a compelling case, supported by a large amount of evidence, including financial records and witness testimony.

The trial is expected to continue through the end of the month, as the jury has not yet reached a decision on the charges against Ryan.
