

Barney Dugan's Testimony.

We have an Irish friend in Philadelphia whom we call Major—a gallant member of the national guard—the proprietor of a first-rate saloon on Chestnut street—a handsome, witty, big-hearted fellow, “whose nature is like unto the nature of a brick.” The Major has a most happy knack of telling anecdotes, and a short time ago we heard him relate the following, which we will give as near as we can in his own words:

“You must know that it is one of the peculiarities of the Irish that when two of them get to quarreling, all who may be present immediately join in, and thus get up a nice bit of a row in the shortest possible notice. A case of this occurred down-town last week. In one of the little streets running from Broad, lives an Irish family rather remarkable for their war-like propensities. The daughter and son, both grown up, got to quarreling, while at breakfast, and the daughter threw a cup of water in the brother's face. He retorted with the nearest missile at hand. The mother took the side of the daughter; and the father of the son, and in a moment the fun—like that of Tam O'Shanter's witches—became fast and furious.” The neighbors, (Irish generally,) hearing the row, rushed to the door, but did not attempt to stop the fight, and in a few moments the fracas culminated by the father stabbing the wife with a carving-knife. By this time the police came and arrested the whole party, including one innocent, ignorant bog-trotter, who had been calmly standing in the door looking on in open-mouthed wonder. His arrest frightened him terribly, and the assurance of the officers that they only wanted him as a witness, could not remove his agitation. The whole party was taken to the office of an alderman, and the case was brought up for hearing. Said the alderman to the witness:

“What is your name?”

“Barney Dugan, yer honor.”

“Well Barney, tell what you know about this case.”

“I will, yer honor. This morn' I was takin' my bite with Molly—that's the ould woman, yer honor—when I heard a divil uv a row over at Tim's. I ran to the door, sur, and there I saw the daughter hev the bruther by the hair uv the head, and the bruther was a slatherin' her wid a loaf uv bread, when the mother she interferred, and the ould man gave her a wipe with the coffee-pot, knockin' her back from the table, when she grasped hold of the skillet and broke it over his head, and the ould man then grabbed the carvin'-knife from the table an' stuck her in the stumick—an' that's all I know about it, yer honor.”

“Will you swear to all this, Barney?” asked the alderman.

“Sure, I will, sur. What shall I swear, sure?”

“Why, kiss the book—the Bible; that is the only kind of swearing we permit here.”

“An' is this the good book I must kiss? I'll do that same, sure; but would yer honor jist untie that bit uv string, that I may see if it is the good book, indade?”

“That is hardly necessary,” replied the alderman. “I give you my word that that book is the Bible, and that ought to satisfy you, I think.”

“Sure, it does, sur; but I'd be better satisfied if I saw it wid me two eyes fur myself.”

“Well, stand back for the present, until we see what the other witnesses have to say.”

“Barney took a seat on the bench, and the case progressed to a conclusion. It was clear that the woman had been stabbed in the row, but none of the witnesses swore that they saw her stabbed, except Barney. He was, therefore, again called up by the alderman.

“Barney Dugan, you swear positively that you saw the prisoner stab the woman in the fracas?”

“Sur?”

“You swear you saw the prisoner stab the woman in the fracas?” repeated the alderman.

“No, sur; I didn't say that at all, yer honor.”

“Why, you a moment ago not only said it, but swore to it. Will you repeat now what you did see?”

“Yes, sur, I will. I saw Tim, there, stab the ould woman wid a carvin'-knife in the stumick, but divil the bid I see him stab her in the fracas, yer honor!”

“This explanation ‘upset the gravity of the court,’ and it was some moments before the alderman could control his nerves sufficient to bind Barney over to appear at court as a witness—a part of the proceedings which completely disgusted the son of Green Erin.”

Calling a Minister.

Squire Skinner, said Deacon Jones, you must be aware that a meeting has been warned to decide on settling our candidate for the ministry; and I called to inquire if he received your approbation.

I shall not vote for him, said Squire Skinner.

Do you not think him sound in doctrine? asked the Deacon.

Entirely orthodox, said the Squire; sound to the core.

Is he not a good speaker? asked the Deacon. Never heard better, said the Squire.

Is he not an agreeable man? inquired Deacon Jones.

Perfectly so in most respects, replied the Squire.

Surely you have heard nothing against his moral character? said the Deacon.

Not a lisp, replied the Squire.

Squire Skinner, said Deacon Jones, we ought to be frank in a matter of so much importance; if you have any real objections to the settlement of Mr. Stebbins, I hope you will tell me what they are.

Squire Skinner took his long nine out of his mouth, held it at some distance from him in his left hand, looked straight down the garden walk with a great deal of earnestness, and replied: “Deacon Jones, I will say to you once for all that I will never vote for a man to be settled over this ancient parish who toes in when he walks.”

Deacon Jones rose to go. He saw the Squire's back was up, and it was folly to argue with him. But the Deacon was a true Christian, and did not wish to go without leaving a more agreeable impression on the Squire's mind, so he said in the mildest manner possible, “Squire Skinner, I hope you will attend the meeting to-morrow night and hear what our people have to say on the subject. Possibly you may change your views. Your opinions are entitled to much consideration. But I am bound in all fairness to say Mr. Stebbins is so popular with the people that I think there will be a very large majority in his favor.”

Squire Skinner rose in great excitement; his face was flushed, his left hand held his long-nine, and his right arm was raised like a pump handle; he looked as much like a spread eagle as was possible for him, when he exclaimed with all the eloquence of a Tom Stevenson, “Deacon Samuel Jones, let me tell you, sir, that if you are so demented as to select a pastor of this ancient parish who toes in when he walks, I—I—I for one, sir, will abandon the whole Christian religion!”

Save your Paper Rags.

The inhabitants of Utah are requested to gather up and save their worn out wagon covers, and every description of cotton and linen rags for paper making, and deliver them, from time to time, to the Bishops of the several Wards, or the ‘News’ and ‘Mountain’ Offices or their agents, for which, when clean, they will be allowed five cents a pound. The rags can be sufficiently cleansed in pure water, without soap.

It is expected that, in a few months, all who wish can receive paper in exchange for rags.
