Our Country Correspondaries.

Ogden Junction, June 12.—Fourteen Warm Spring Indians, occupying one car, arrived this morning from the winter change of one of their number whom they call the "Doctor." This individual is very intelligent, speaks English well, and is dressed in a highly civilized costume, including collar, cuffs and jewelry. The "Doctor" says the party are on a pleasure trip, are going to exhibit themselves for the purpose of raising funds. They will visit Washington, interview President Grant, and proceed to England, and exhibit themselves there.

These Indians are much more cleanly and intelligent than the Digger Indians of Utah. They cultivate the land, live in houses, and are partially civilized. There were three squaws and two or three boys in the party.

Provo Times, June 9—

By invitation we called this morning at the residence of Dr. John Riggs, and saw two cancer cases which had been under his treatment about two weeks. One was a cancer on the under lip of Mrs. Catherine Anderson, a citizen of Lehi, who has been afflicted for nearly three years; the other case is that of John Crawford of Manti, Sanpete County. One cancer is near the eye and another on his cheek, both of which are growing. Ourselves each other, both cases are doing well and in all probability within two weeks they will be entirely cured.

St. George Enterprise, June 5—

Currants are ripe. Prof. Shultz has commenced his Academy in the St. George Hall.

Apples, pears and plums are doing well.

Das. Cragin and others on the Oregon trail have got new potatoes large enough to eat.

J. W. Crosby showed us a live badger on the 19th inst. It was about the size of a small dog, and of a dark gray color.

Grapes are doing splendidly. They are large and many bunches from 12 to 15 inches long.

Wm. H. Branch, sen., business agent of the Mount Tremblant Lumbering Co., informs us that the mill is in successful operation, sawing from four to six thousand feet of timber daily. The road is completed to the mill.

This morning Jessie W. Crosby and two or three others were attempting to cross the Santa Clara south of this city, on their way to work in the field, when the water turned the wagon over on its side, and a few rods away, the marts, horses and wagon were lost. No damage done.

The St. George Temple is progressing fine. The water-table is all set, and already up to the window sills, and the sills are set, there being no windows between the water-table and the sills. The wooden poles are going up on the north side, preparatory to the masons going to work, when the walls are raised high on the south and west.

Salt Lake City.

CHICAGO, May 22nd, 1854.

Salt Lake City is so remarkably suited to my mind that I left it with great regret and a resolution to visit it on my return journey. Of the religious development called Mormonism I am quite ignorant, having never dared to investigate it, and therefore does not come with in the scope of my observations here, but of this I am certain that there must be a strong master mind which influences and regulates the actions of this remarkable settlement.

This is a unity of government in an entire community, and is not observable in any of the towns of America that I have yet seen, and which has been productive of very excellent results. The streets are wide and very judiciously laid out, a fine stream of clear water runs through the center of the avenue, which is lined by over-arching trees, the whole presenting a uniformly beautiful effect. The population seem very orderly, yet exceedingly active, and many businesses must be done at this point, which in the center of a large metropolis would be done in branch railways. The houses are substantially built, many being of brick and stone. The stores are spacious and filled with goods of the highest class. The people dress well and the social regulations are excellent. The saloons are very limited in number, owing no doubt to the heavy license charge ($1,000 a year) and none are open on Sunday. I tried very hard to obtain a stimulant, being very weak and succeeded in getting a prescription and failing in it generally medically.

In instances of the local spirit of enterprise here I may mention that the people have established a paper mill, &c., & the printing offices are particularly well supplied with all the appliances of the advanced spirit of the times. I paid a long visit to the Deseret News office, which does the entire printing for the complete printing office in California. It is under the foremanship of Mr. Bull, who politely showed me over the whole establishment, and I was indeed astonished, to find, so extensive and complete an office, with every machine, Gordon, and Universal press, printing chimes and a well supplied bindery, the buildings spacious and well lighted, the various departments distinct under his management, the machinery however, is of the most extraordinary, in that they have managed, for casting their own type, but this is some difficulty in securing a competent foreman is not at present in the office. The active spirit of developing local industries is at the root of all wealth, and is chiefly owing to this state of prosperity of the place as described. The houses are on a scale of elegance and the charges are quite reasonable.

There is a fine church building, a splendid building, surpassing in size and elegance any of the San Francisco houses. The temple of the Mormons is now in course of erection, and will take a few years to complete it, and it will be a most singular looking structure when completed. The night before last, Victoria Woodhull had been brought to a crowded house at the theatre. On
