Clubwomen in Chicago have been taking an interest in a strike of girl corset makers at Aurora. After vainly trying to induce the factory owners to arbitrate, the clubwomen have done all they could to find employment for the strikers, and several wealthy women have offered homes to penniless girls until the lockout is at an end.

In Colorado those who contribute to a child's delinquency or aid or encourage it in crime are punished more severely than the child. This commends itself as a common sense measure. If the interest taken in juvenile courts by women's clubs has no better result, it has opened a great many eyes to the fact that there are more bad parents than bad children in all classes of society. At a meeting of the Philadelphia Mothers' club this week Mrs. A. It. Ramsey, head probation officer, told of the needs of juvenile courts, emphasizing the necessity of dealing stringently with delinquent parents. "We accuse children of running away from home when you would respect a dog for running away from a place," said Mrs. Ramsey. "Parents should be made to support their children in a proper manner. Many of them do not care for their children at all. Nearly every boy who comes into court has his fingers stained yellow with cigarettes. There is a law against selling minors cigarettes, but the public should see that those who sell the cigarettes are punished." The railroad companies, who carry coal in open cars, thus placing temptation in the way of children, were blamed by the probation officer.

Mrs. Frederic B. Scott, chairman of the joint juvenile court committee for the women's clubs of Pennsylvania and the State Mothers' Congress, has prepared a history of the juvenile court movement in Pennsylvania, which is about to be presented to Congress and will be printed as a public document. At the request of Wilfrid Powell, British consul at Philadelphia, Mrs. Scott has written a brief statement of the system as it has been worked out, not only in Pennsylvania, but in New York, Illinois, Colorado, and other states. This statement has been sent to England and to Australia, where the juvenile court idea is beginning to be agitated.

An eastern club found a new way to make a record. A distinguished literary people something out of the ordinary. The affair was called a "Literary Rebus." Each member or guest was requested to wear a card or article representing the title of a book. The one guessing the most titles Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin Kings gave an autograph copy of "Rebecca." Another prize was given to the person whose device was so clever that no one guessed what it represented.

Two distinguished Englishmen, John Morley and Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, are outspoken advocates of woman suffrage. The executive committee of Women's Liberal Federation of England and the Scottish Liberal Federation were recently addressed by these men, both of whom expressed the belief that full suffrage would ultimately be given women. Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman said that he believed that the country at large would become more and more favorable to the enfranchisement of women in view of the fact that parliament was dealing, or was trying to deal, one after another with those social questions on which not only women might be entitled to vote, but on which their opinion was even more valuable and essential than the opinion of men. He was not at liberty to say more than that he personally regarded with much sympathy the objects of the deputation.

Emma Shaw Coleclough writes the following interesting account of the building of the clubhouse of the Colored Woman's club at Hampton, Virginia. The founder of the club is a Hampton graduate who, after her marriage with an educated and prosperous man, made her home in the town, about four miles from the school. The unknown yard and thirty homes of the negroes of the neighborhood troubled Mrs. Baldwin, and she began a work of education by inviting in young women to her home on Tuesday afternoon. "At first," she said, "I started to read to them, but I soon found it necessary to plan some work for their hands. 'From home, big handkerchiefs—with whose even more valuable and essential than sewing lessons led to clothes and articles of household use."

From one thing to another work was led, and sewing teachers at Hampton volunteered their services in aid of this work among their own people, until the demands grew too small to meet the demands made upon it, and so called. "The railroad companies, who carry coal in open cars, thus placing temptation in the way of children, were blamed by the probation officer."

Newbro's Herpicide

An Exquisite Hair Dressing.

THE ORIGINAL REMEDY THAT "KILLS THE DANDRUFF GERM."

THE LADIES OBJECT to a gummy and sticky hair dressing or one that is full of sedimentary chemicals intended to dye the hair. The marked preference for a clean and dainty preparation, particularly one that overcomes excessive oiliness and leaves the hair light and fluffy, is reflected in the enormous sale of Newbro's Herpicide. Discriminating ladies become enthusiastic over its refreshing quality and exquisite fragrance.

A WOMAN TO BE PRETTY must have pretty hair. The features may be quite plain or even homely, yet if the head is crowned with an abundance of beautiful hair, attractiveness will not be lacking. The poet says: "Fair tresses man's imperial race ensnare." Herpicide gives the hair a charming distinctiveness that is characteristic of no other hair dressing.

DISEASED HAIR A MISFORTUNE. Unsightly or diseased hair is a misfortune in more ways than one. There is the actual injury to the hair follicles, and the consequent loss or thinning of the hair; this may cause diseases that sometimes follow a removal or thinning of nature's protection to the head. A diseased condition of the hair affects a woman's disposition to a marked degree.

THOUSANDS WRITE LIKE THIS. "I can speak in the highest terms of your Herpicide. It stopped my hair from coming out after one application. (Signed.) W. E. WELKE. Salt Lake City, Utah.

THE KNOWING ONES ASK FOR IT. "As Herpicide is used in my shop continually, I can testify to its efficiency as a dandruff cure and preventative of falling hair. My customers ask for it." (Signed.) J. L. HARRIS. Ogden, Utah.
