BACK TO HARD WORK AT UTAH 'VARSITY'

Team Meets Montana Aggies One Week From Next Saturday—Hard Game Looked For.

Back to hard work now is the decision of the coach and captain at the university. The men have been given a break since their strenuous game in the mud with the soldiers on Saturday. But now they will have to make it up by becoming extra strict and down to the bone work out preparation for the coming game with the Montana Aggies a week from next Saturday.

Now much is known about the Roseman boys except that they are husky but still provide enough for Utah at least if not for the mats. This, however, goes far into the mat. Now providing you can meet them on a dry field. While they had hook and deck, the Indians may not face them. The bands are willing to take chance at any team in the state and believe that it can show them out class. McMillan still has his "mud" which he uses for coaching. The team was able to work a single one "spread" play last Saturday, and still the public could see from some of the end runs, and so forth, even in the mud that the team should be able to do something on a dry field.

Cap. Brown says: "We have offered $100 Denver or the Colorado Miners a job and the Miners are willing to make it good for any Colorado school we were prevented from playing the University of Colorado, Colorado College or the Colorado Aggies. An account of the year's conference entered into by us is the reason which prevents freshmen from getting on our team. We have this past about five freshmen on our team."

CY SEYMOUR'S CHECKERED WORK

Cy Seymour, of the New York Giants, has had one of the most checkered seasons that have come to his lot while he has been connected with professional baseball.

First of all, he reported to the team in Texas for spring training after a disagreement with the club in Gotham. He had not been in Texas more than long enough to taste the spring water there before he became involved in trouble with the manager, owing to the conduct which he forced upon Alfie Latham.

McGraw suspended him for what he had done, Seymour decided that he would show McGraw that he could be a well behaved young man and a valuable member of the team. He remained in Texas at his own expense. When the Giants started for the east he remained with them. He paid his fare from city to city, and accompanied the players, although McGraw would not put him regularly on the team. As the Giants neared the east, and Seymour still conducted himself in the most exemplary manner, McGraw became lenient and gave him a chance now and then.

The players returned to New York and the season began. Seymour did not draw a regular berth at once, for the manager wished to try out his fielders and see what the new comers might be able to do for him. At last the time came when it looked as if there would have to be a little more batting and a little more accurate fielding, and Seymour was given a chance.

On the first day on which he took the field he raced headlong into Murray in his eagerness to make a catch in the outfield, and was so badly injured that he did not get back to the game for a long time.

When he did return he began to bat, and he kept on batting to the season's close. His work in the latter part of the season was one of the good features of the Giants' play, for the batting which he injected into the game went a long way to help the giants beat their strong rivals.

McGraw was sincerely sympathetic when Cy was injured, as he always had a warm spot in his heart for him. Prior to the injury he felt that he was only measuring out discipline as he was not doing his best. He believed that it would be advisable to permit Seymour to impose on the team and management, and now that it is all over it is not far from right to imagine that Seymour is better for it.

He certainly threw his heart into his work after he was able to get back on the field, and he was not careless and reckless, as he was toward the end of last year, when he was so sure that the Giants had the championship won that he broke over club rules when his services were most needed.

SHORTER SCHEDULE FOR THE TWO MAJOR LEAGUES

Chicago, Nov. 2.—R. B. Johnson, president of the American league, favors a shorter schedule for the two major leagues instead of lengthening the list of games, as proposed by Charles W. Murphy of the Chicago National league team. The American league executive said yesterday that he would favor a schedule of 140 games in the place of 154 game series that was played last year.

President Johnson says that the short schedule would not work a hardship on the club owners, except perhaps those whose teams were "way up in the race."

The average game in the major league after Sept. 20, according to President Johnson, barely pays expenses.

MILITARY RIDING CONTESTS IN NEW YORK

New York, Nov. 3.—The American officers who will compete at the Madison Square Garden horse show against the British entries in horseshoe riding, will all come from Fort Riley, Kansas. Lieut. Gordon Johnston of the Second cavalry, has arrived here with 14 horses. The British officers and their workshop have been here since Oct. 20.

FITZHERBERT WINS ELECTION HANDICAP

Aqueduct, Nov. 2.—Cheered by 5,000 persons, Fitzherbert, favorite at 4 to 5,

TWO LEADING CANDIDATES FOR NATIONAL TEN MILE CHAMPIONSHIP.

BONHAG DALY

The coming 10-mile run championship, which is to be held in Central Park, New York, Nov. 6, promises to be the most sensational amateur distance race held in many years. Nearly all the crack distance runners of the country are entered, and it is expected that the majority of them will start. John Daly, the old war horse of the Irish-American club of New York, who won the title in 1907, will be on hand, and as he is going strong, it is to be expected that he will be particularly fortunate in hitting the curves of the Chicago pitchers, and he won't have an easy time, however.

George Bonhag is fast getting into the shape that made him famous. Bonhag holds practically all records from two to eight miles indoors, and he will endeavor to add the 10-mile to his long string.

These players returned to New York, and the season began. Seymour did not draw a regular berth at once, for the manager wished to try out his fielders and see what the new comers might be able to do for him. At last the time came when it looked as if there would have to be a little more batting and a little more accurate fielding, and Seymour was given a chance.

On the first day on which he took the field he raced headlong into Murray in his eagerness to make a catch in the outfield, and was so badly injured that he did not get back to the game for a long time.

JIM JEFFRIES IS A HARD WORKER

New York, Nov. 2.—Jim Jeffries is working hard for Johnson, make no mistake about that. When he arrived in New York, after he had decided to take up the white man's cause, he was fat and dimpled. Those dimples have disappeared entirely.

There has come a great change in Jeff's physical makeup. The clothes he wore that day have been packed deep down in his big trunk and they will not see the light of day until such time as Jeff is ready to take up a life of ease and comfort. There is a suggestion of the hollows that made his great strength fighting face in the old Harbin Spring days.

Jeff is a tremendous worker at all times. He never shirked his training labors and no man has ever been able to follow him along the mountain trails; neither horse nor man. They'd raise him at times in Harbin after the night meal. It wasn't that Jeff had taken to his bed. He had slipped into the old barn by a back door and there they found him many and many a time in the dark, tugging might and main at his heavy leather bag. He liked work and best of all he liked to be in the best possible shape.

Jeff in condition was invincible, and no one knew it better than J. J. J. All that enthusiasm characterizes the work he is doing daily at Cooper's gymnasium in this city. He never misses a morning, and he never missed the hour or so of fast work behind the scenes of every theater he has worked in this city. He started in the Wigwam at St. Paul, and his friend looks good. It is hard to think he may not be the same old grizzly of the prize ring. A lot of the black, shaggy hair that once graced his massive head has disappeared. He isn't wimpish about the waist, as he once was, but otherwise there seems to be little change, and it is safe to predict that after three months of right smart work Jim Jeffries will look as formidable as ever he did. But the wind—yea, boy!

That's all!

If Jim Jeffries is sent hurtling to the floor by the black demon it will be because Jim Jeffries will be. They all look great when they try to come back. Kid Laylawn, Frank Erne, Oscar Gardner, Jack O'Brien, Tom Sharkey—any of them you name at random—looked as good as ever when they attempted a new start. One thing did for all of them. The wind wasn't there. Jeff didn't have any too much of it when he left him at work at Bayard on his arrival from the coast. It looked as though he never would recover that greatest of all fighting essentials.

The work that Jeffries has been doing since then has in a great measure eliminated all trace of fatigued breathing. Jeff will have to have his wind intact if he figures to thrash Lal Ahola. As matters stand, Jim is the one taking the risk. Johnson was never better. Jim is an unknown quantity right now. No one would like to see him hit his hand on follows like Flynn, Kaufman and that crew before risking ignominious defeat at the hands of the black. Jeff says: "No." He says the wind will be all O. K., and he is the doctor.

It is wind-breaking. It looks like a fatal undertaking.

GAMBLING EVIL IN WORLD'S SERIES

Championship Almost Lost When Betting Men Got Abstein's Nerve During Great Diamond Struggle.

New York, Nov. 2.—A glaring evil of the world's series was the gambling on the games. Betting reached proportions many times greater than ever before and when the title is played for next year the chances are great that the national commission will break the lid of the police to the cities represented by the contesting teams to drive the gamblers out of town.

Thousands of dollars were bet openly in both Pittsburgh and Detroit without the slightest effort on the part of the authorities to stop it. Many "cheap sports" followed the Pirates. Detroit encouraged by the failure of the police to even make a bluff to stop betting, the gamblers opened bookshops in the lobbies of the principal hotels at Detroit and made bets without the slightest interference.

Had Pittsburgh won the series the club would have had no one blamable but the gamblers. The club has lost several valuable players in recent years through the gamblers, who have gotten after men like Branchfield, Beaumont and Ritchey and made it impossible for them to play their best game in that city. The officials of the Pirates have worked hard to down the evil, but it has not been suppressed entirely.

Some of these bettors have made life miserable for First Baseman Abstein during the closing weeks of the race, and they had the initial sucker "on the run" before the world's series started.

ABSTEIN LOSES HIS NERVE.

It is admitted by the Pirates that it was Abstein's work that played a big part in making them National league champions. Abstein appeared to be particularly fortunate in hitting the curves of the Chicago pitchers, and he won the games from the Cubs by his long driving. All that was forgotten when Abstein made a few errors, and the young man's nerve was shaken before the world's series started.

During the games with Detroit Abstein appeared to forget all that he knew about baseball. He ran the bases foolishly, made a number of costly errors, failed to hit well and disobeyed orders. In fact, his playing was worse than that of any other man on either team. The other Pirates, seeing that Abstein was the "goat" for the combination, kept up the cry against him, thus shifting some of the blame for their own bad playing.

Before the series was ended many of the Pirates blamed Abstein, and it was reported that he would be traded to some other team as speedily as possible.

The Pittsburgh club has never been able to till the job at first base since Branchfield played there and "Kitty" it has been claimed, was driven off the team by President Dreyfus and Manager Clark. It was to that hole at first base plowed up and they most certainly do, they will have to wage a more vigorous crusade than ever against the gamblers.
