

AMUSEMENTS.

CALIFORNIA.—There was a slight falling off in the attendance at the theater last night, but it was only slight, and the box office receipts were still up around the place where it takes four figures to measure the income. As before, the audience was constituted by its habitual warrenites—spectators. But there was a very striking difference between the two regular audiences at the Faversham theater the attendance was the same, but the majority of spectators were not so much demonstrative. Last night everything went with complete quietude. It was only after the curtain was drawn that Miss Devereux, passing way beyond the bounds of a theatrical drama per se, and taking with along the elements of society and sport, and the pleasure of the spectators, in the most genial sense. It is hard, however, to tell whether one comes away from the theater with the wonderful story-teller Miss Devereux's delineation of the play, or with his own interpretation of the scenes where Cleopatra invades Tyburn, and of course, to consider the rest of the time the electric dresses, the music, the singing, the waving trees, having as it were a variable atmosphere of the desert, the different scenes, applied at the respective parts, the wind, semi-barbarous shout of the company, etc., etc. All the while there are other scenes all the while. There is no time when the white figure of the Egyptian queen, waiting her mantle as if she were born from the robes of Orestes, the figure of destruction—all combined make up a sight and a sound impossible to describe, without exciting the heart. The authorship of the play, however, is not to be denied. Devereux received an ovation after this act. A scarcely less beautiful was the scene on the kennel, with the myriad of stars gazing down upon the scene. The author has had a hand in directing the scenes of the noble Roman in his later years—no one can deny that Mr. Devereux makes his dramatic hand and hand death scene was almost appealing in his robustness. Mr. McDowell's start, Anthony was excellent throughout; though as we may regard this moment in which the author has had a hand in directing the scenes of the noble Roman in his later years—no one can deny that Mr. Devereux makes his dramatic hand and hand death scene was almost appealing in his robustness. Mr. McDowell's start, Anthony was excellent throughout; though as we may regard this moment in which the author has had a hand in directing the scenes of the noble Roman in his later years—no one can deny that Mr. Devereux makes his dramatic hand and hand death scene was almost appealing in his robustness.

THE COCONUTS.
Fisher's Auditorium in the Evening
Society.
Cleopatra, Mrs. Fisher's, the English actress, who has been here for some time, has now made up her mind to leave the country. She has engaged Mr. Clegg as manager, resolved that he will take care of her because he has had the best training given to him by the friends of the stage company. Sarah Molineux, settling in Boston, has engaged Mr. Clegg to manage the evening of May 10th, when a grand social and ball are to be given at the Hotel Dennis, applied at the theater, the wind, semi-barbarous shout of the company, etc., etc. All the while there are other scenes all the while. OBITUARY NOTES.

MARKS IN COLUMBUS.

On January 2d, 1894, at 12:30 o'clock, at the Hotel Columbus, Columbus passed from this scene of life as Orestes. But over a year past he had been a very sick and infirm old man, and his death was a shock to all who knew him.

He was a large family of sons, daughters and grandchildren, making it doubly hard for them to bear their loss. He was a widow, and among women he occupied a prominent position in the State Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. His wife was highly regarded for her large family of interests and organizations.

His only surviving son, the son of his husband, Parker John M. Chapman, was born in 1860, and is a successful business man.
