A DRESSY COSTUME SEEN IN THE ENCLOSURE.

All sorts of costumes are seen at the races, everything from the severest smart mohair or serge tailor-made to the most elaborate tollette of silk, chiffon or some such dressy material. Double chiffon in a periwinkle blue shade made one of the most attractive of the colored costumes seen recently in the track enclosure. The very full skirt pleated into the waistband over a foundation of taffeta in a lighter shade of blue was very elaborately trimmed with repousse lace flouncings and galloons with narrow ribbon in the blue shade. The trimming extended downward from the knees, and the drop skirt ruffle was frilled with many rows of the narrow blue ribbon, making a pretty foundation for the lace flouncing. The bodice was an elaborate affair of the chiffon and lace with frillings of the narrow ribbon. The back of the bodice was quite as elaborate as the front, and back and front of the high girdle built in one with the waist were finished with large white pearl buttons, centered with knots of blue cord. The white lace hat had a band of blue satin around the edge, with trimmings of white ostrich and osprey, and the dainty coquette who wore this confection carried over her shoulder a sunshade of white taffeta with printings of violets. Her feet were incased in patent colt pumps, and when she lifted the long train one caught a glimpse of open-work lace hosiery.

PRINCESS COSTUME WITH LACE DRAPERIES.

A very attractive dinner gown worn by one of New York's elct at a fashionable untown restaurant a few nights since showed to advantage the fashionable combination of two materials in one frock; in this instance soft chiffon satin with mousseline de sole. The costume was a princess, the bodice made entirely of the satin tuck ed at the waistline and separated at this point by panels of the tucked mousseline which extend to the top of the foot flounce. Both the satin and the mousseline were white, while the ribbon appliques at the top of the flounce were in a delicate shade of pink mixed with threads of silver, and a very narrow silver sequin edging bordered the strappings of satin on the chiffon in the back breadth, likewise in the front panel. The bodice, cut in a point in the back and rounding in the front, was draped with point lace, which fell over the top of the arm and was caught up on the left arm with a band of black maline, the right arm being covered with a tiny puff of the lace. The foundation of this costume was a white taffeta princess, boned snugly to the figure and draped with a delicate pink chiffon. A dog collar of pearls with diamond clasps and a diamond chain bracelet were th e only ornments.
