Fun With Her.

Harry Allen is having some fun with pretty Elsie Reasoner. He says Elsie's stories "from the front," during the war in Cuba, were drawn more from imagination than anything else. But Henry goes up against some large propositions when he makes this statement, because the testimony of officers high in the regular service, who were on the firing line when Miss Reasoner came up directly contradicts Harry. Neverthe-less, "the intrepid scout's" reference to Miss Reasoner, is very funny. The Kansas City Journal gives the forlownew action, his dismissal. ing 'Henry Allen, the intrepid scout and dare-devil Cuban correspondent. has joined forces with the wicked men who are poking fun at Miss Elsie Reasoner. the Kansas girl who glorified the San tlaga campaign by wearing such stun-ning costumes. He notes the charge that Miss Reasoner never saw the island of Cuba, and says: "Miss Reasoner did see service in Cuba, she was there over two hours and a half. She came over from Kingston in Clara Barton's ship five days after the fight ended. The editor of the Herald saw her when she landed: she was a dream in a pretty shirt wals and duck skirt. We had the felicity of directing her to a hospital tent where he wounded were receiving treatment She desired to interview the wounded The sight was interesting-but very formal. Many of the wounded had sent their shirts down to the seashore sent their shirts down to the seashore to be laundered. Others had left their shirts in the jungle during the fight-ing. When Miss Reasoner appeared at the tent door the soldiers blushed and tried to die. The hospital steward was agitated by the enexpected ap-pearance of a dream like Miss Rea-soner. He asked her to go away and come back some day when the soldiers were expecting her. She was already retreating when the steward spoke. It was the only time she retreated while was the only time she retreated while in Cuba. A newspaper boat left the island two hours later and Miss Reasoner sailed back to Kingston, where she wrote some of the most thrilling war pieces we ever read."
