A MODIFIED PICTURE EFFECT.

The white hat for evening or dressy wear is being pushed aside for the hat of pale blue or pale green. Velvet is the material most chosen; indeed the vogue of the velvet hat is one of the prominent features of the millinery season. Most often it is a frame smoothly covered and curious of shape. In the one illustrated we see the brim smooth and the softly draped crown, a development most softening and becoming to the face. The simple outline of this hat is in marked contrast to the convolution of brim and crown that characterizes most of the autumn chapeaux, and is a pleasing deviation from that rule, we must confess. The ever-present bandeau is arranged in this hat to give a slight side and more marked back elevation. A cluster of astrich tips in a shade lighter than the velvet are arranged at the left.

The Daughters of the "Mormon" battalion have had in mind for some months the project of organizing a society for patriotic and historical purposes, and to keep alive the deeds and names of the noble and brave men and women who "blazed the trail" for 3,000 miles of pathless desert, and whose sufferings and patriotism have never been surpassed, their heralms never properly extolled. Capt. P. St. George Cook, who met the battalion in Los Angeles, complimented them on their achievement in accomplishing the greatest infantry march in the history of our country, if not in the world. "Napoleon crossed the Alps," he said, "but you have crossed a continent." Some other interesting remarks were made by the women when he visited Salt Lake City, let me ride bareheaded through the streets of this city in honor of the noble 500 battalion boys.

The Wisconsin State Federation has done a very valuable service to the state through its landmarks committee, organized in October, 1903. Letters were sent to clubs throughout the state asking that in every town efforts be made to secure documents and records bearing on early settlements and town history. The letter suggested marking locations of first buildings by planting trees, setting tables, etc., finding and marking sites of old Indian villages, and especially caring for and preserving Indian mounds. Indian legends of local history were asked for, and it was urged that each club incorporate in its yearly program a "landmarks day," when results of researches should be reported and papers read on related subjects. The response to the committee's letter has been very satisfactory, considering the number of activities to which the clubs were already pledged. Through, at least, has been accomplished to encourage other federations to engage in similar researches. Miss Julia A. Lapshaw, of Oconomowoc, chairman of the committee, writes: "This club is raising money to purchase and protect the famous 'mound mound' near Baraboo. Another will probably mark black Hawk's trail with a row of trees and a tablet. The point where Marquette and Joliet crossed from the Fox to the Wisconsin river is to be marked, likewise the site of the first house in Fond du Lac. Many valuable and interesting papers have been prepared for the landmarks day meetings, which the committee hopes to secure for preservation. The committee urges all clubs to secure original material from pioneers, old letters and documents, maps, diaries, etc., rather than from books. In many instances this has been done. Some other women and children, given at the National Woman's suffrage association, Mrs. Florence Kelley said: "In every state vote upon the surfrage, our weakness proves to be among the wage-earners of the cities. Yet it is easier to protect the children than the wage-earners. The children are the future, and the wage-earners are the present. Since our members are spending time and energy in this successful effort on behalf of the children, why should we not adopt as a settled policy the method which will secure the aggressive friendship of the workingmen voters? Why should we not systematically submit to their organizations for their approval all our bills, including among the number one embodying the principles now embraced in our plan of work, namely, that young breadwinners under the age of 15 years should not be employed longer than eight hours in one day, and not after 6 p. m. in commerce and manufacture?

TAILORED WAIST IN PLAID FLANNEL.

The smart girl, she of the tailored variety, affects the flannel waist this autumn, and nine times out of ten it is a flannel. The shops all are showing the most fetching combinations in fine flannels or worsteds in every imaginable tone and combination, so that one may easily strike the general color note of the costume in some of them. The shirt waist shapes seem not to partake of the shorter shoulder line that fashion decrees right and proper for the more formal bodice. The arrangement of pleats on the shoulder still conveys the breadth that the athletic girl possesses and her less well developed sister affects. Sleeve shapes are divided between the medium coat sleeve effect and the regulation shirt sleeve, without which latter some of the smart shops declared a short waist an incongruous impossibility.
