LAWLESS STELLAR AZIMUTH MACHINE

Given a Test by Practical Use and Proved Most Valuable.

ON THE FLAGSHIP NEW YORK

Greatest Discovery in Science of Navigation Since That of the Magnetic Needle.

San Francisco, Cal., May 12 .- The stellar azimuth machine, invented and patented by Capt. R. T. Lawless of the Oceanic Steamship company, has been given the test of practical use, and has proved a most valuable addition to the mariner's ald in navigation. One of these machines was used on board the flagship New York during the just ended cruise of the Pacific squadron, and the trial not only proved its value, but demonstrated the wonderful possibilities of Capt. Lawless' invention.

According to the navigating officer of the New York, the stellar azimuth ma-chine is an advanced step in the direction of a mechanical navigator, which will solve the problems of position and courses with absolutely accuracy, the factor of mental miscalculation being entirely eliminated. It is to this end that navigators have been working ever since they discovered the art of laying out trackways over the ocean. If Capt Lawless has solved this problem he has given to the science of navigation the greatest help since the discovery of the magnetic needle's pro-clivity to point to the north.

Rear-Admiral Glass speaks very highly of the machine, and the one that went with the squadron will be sent to the navy department at Washington to be tested in conjunction with the navigating officer's report.

Boise, Idaho, May 5 .- The week opened with cool, cloudy weather over the entire state, high wind over the more exposed portions, and heavy rain and snow in eastern counties; there was almost entire absence of precipitation in the western and northern counties. This period of cool weather culminated in severe frosts in all parts of the stare on April 29, resulting in material injury to fruit in localities. Another frost, of less severify was general on May 2, when some damage resulted. From April 29 to the close of the week the weather was, as a rule, bright and pleasant, the temperature becoming normal by May 3.

CROPS.

Fruit-The frosts of April 29 and May 2 resulted in some damage to all varieties of fruit in western localities; however, as the trees were extremely full of bloom, it is believed that in most instances, enough bloom escaped injury to produce a good crop. Notwithstand-ing the low temperature during most of the week, fruit made rapid progress in southwestern Idaho, apple and and prune trees are in full bloom, while early fruits are well set.
