"Speaking of the intelligence of ani mals," said B. B. Heywood, United States marshal of Salt Lake City, at the Windsor hotel, "reminds me of one of the wisest mules I ever saw and which f sold a few days ago, because he was too wise a brute for me. Would you be-lieve it. I had been feeding that lazy scoundrel for more than a year before I discovered that he was working me. About six weeks ago I went on the range to look after a herd of horses and cattle. The range riders asked me for a few mor horses for herding purposes and I told them to use the mule I spoke of, a big, strong, black beast called Chi cage. "Well it happened they used him two days each week, Tuesdays and Fridays After the second week old Chicago dis-covered the system and knew when hi days of labor were due. On Tuesday morning of the third week, when the boys got up to saddle their mounts they couldn't find Chicago. Of course there was nothing to do but to get another mount, which was done, after the drove had been in motion about half an hour we heard a hee-hawing half a mile away and preity soon Chicago came running up and took his place with the herd. The following Friday the same thing was repeated. In the early morn-ing he was missing, but turned up after we had started again. "'Ah, ha' said I, 'you've worked this game long enough, old boy,' and the next Monday night I picketed him out. But say, it was worth a fortune to have seen the disappointed expression on that mule's face when I tied the rope around his neck. He turned his head partly around and watched me intently; one of his ears dropped and his tall hung like a whipped dog's. He attempted to edge over towards me when he thought I wasn't looking, and I believe he would have tried his heels on me had. I given him an opportunity. After that
