COLOR APPEARS IN LINGERIE BLOUSES.

Some of the daintiest of the lingerie blouses show considerable color. This is due to the widespread fancy for coloring, which has extended even to lingerie and corsets. On some of the fine linen and batiste blouses are set narrow vertical bands of striped lawn entre deux with tucks. Others have frillings, collars and cuffs of colored bordering, and for some others the pompadour figured, plain and barred muslins are employed. Both high-pointed stocks and Dutch collars are worn with such waists, the stocks being decorated with colored velvet or satin ribbon tie bows and the turnover collars terminating with ascot, four-in-hand or chiffon ties.

SILKEN BATHING SUITS ARE SHAPELY.

Time was, and not so many years ago, when bathing suits were a horror to contemplate. But all that has changed and the woman who studies her appearance first and her health afterwards need no longer hesitate to appear on the seashore in bathing garb. Costumes in plain taffetas and fine mohair are in all the dark shades. They have skirts which discreetly cover the knees and fit smoothly about the hips, although by means of shirtings fullness is added wherever necessary. Sailor collars and nautical ties distinguish most of the deeply plaited blouses whose sleeves are short and puffy, the better to display a pretty elbow.

PONGEE ONE-PIECE FROCKS ARE PRACTICAL.

Every woman now feels as though her wardrobe were not complete for the summer unless it includes at least one pongee gown. These are most practical when of one-piece, including a skirt of walking length and a blouse or jumper bodice. While the circular and gored skirt is largely used for costumes of this character, plaits are still much in vogue for the reason that in a material as soft as pongee plaits are not so liable to sag as gores. Pongee summer frocks usually carry soutache or oriental embroideries, and their guimpes are a marked feature. These are of all over embroidered muslin, of fine net closely tucked or of heavy lace.
