The Gratiot Effects on the Silver Question in the House.

BLIND IN REPLY OF SILVER.

Congressman Wilson Replies that the Repeal Bill Would Save the Country.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28.—Blind in his argument in regard to the silver men said he saw no reason whatever for changing the existing ratio of 16 to 1. The production of silver and gold for the last hundred years had been a ratio of about 16 to 1, and that was the ratio of silver coins of the different nations of the world. As far as the operations of the Sherman bill was concerned, the people knew their own money under it, and must know, after all, did the silver in the treasury of 700,000,000 or 800,000,000 of dollars a year were put in circulation.

He went to the clerk's desk and had read a dispatch referring to an article in the New York Evening Post, as to the application of pressure in favor of repeal of the Sherman act, the pressure suggested being that the silver men from every country, he declared it a pitiful fact that the people in the United States were being misled by the silver men.

He said that the silver men were not to be taken into consideration, but that the gold men were to be taken into consideration. He said that the silver men were not to be taken into consideration, but that the gold men were to be taken into consideration. He said that the silver men were not to be taken into consideration, but that the gold men were to be taken into consideration.
