Draped in Mourning, etc.

SAN FRANCISCO, 28.—The bank of California is draped in mourning. All is quiet on California Street, and matters are assuming their usual aspect. Business men do not apprehend failures on Monday, collection day.

Ralston's funeral is postponed till Monday at eleven a.m.

Died of Apoplexy—Bank Matters, &c

The death of Ralston forms the principal topic of conversation; flags are at half mast throughout the city. Expressions of regret and sympathy for the deceased banker are heard on all sides. Later information tends strongly to disprove the theory of suicide, and the statements of the attending physicians go to show that death resulted from apoplexy while swimming. Yesterday Mr. Ralston transferred all his property to Senator William Sharon for the benefit of his creditors; and Mr. Sharon, in receiving the trust, pledged his honor to stand by his old friend to the last dollar of his own private fortune.

At a meeting of the Trustees of the Bank of California, yesterday, Ralston promised that if the management was left in his hands he would pay dollar for dollar to the depositors and fifty cents on the dollar to the stockholders, but after an exciting discussion it was decided to accept his resignation. Considerable difference of opinion exists among the leading stock operators as to the effect of the failure on mining shares when business reopens, some claiming that it will have a beneficial effect, especially as regards the Bonanza mines, as those controlling them will now have better facilities for working them, as the mills owned by the bank party will probably pass into their hands; others take a less hopeful view of the situation.

The trustees of the Bank of California adjourned this evening, after a protracted session, to meet on Monday and attend the funeral of Ralston in a body. They will resume their session on Tuesday. Nothing whatever is known concerning their deliberations. Inquiry develops the fact that as yet the various manufacturing enterprises in the city in which Ralston was interested show no signs of weakness. Coin is being transferred during the day from the U. S. treasury, and though no loans can yet be obtained money is easier. Real estate dealers say the effect on that branch of business will be rather beneficial than otherwise.

An Autopsy.

An autopsy has been made on the body of Ralston, but the coroner as yet declines to make the result public; it will be given to the jury on Tuesday.

Resolutions of Sympathy—Meeting of Trustees.

The Pacific Stock Exchange, this p. m., adopted resolutions deploring the death of Ralston as a faithful friend, valuable citizen and champion of the city and state, extending the sympathy of the board to the family, and resolving to attend the funeral in a body. They appointed a committee to wait on Mrs. Ralston, and tender her the sympathy of the board.

The trustees of the National Gold Bank and Trust Co., this p. m., authorized the president and cashier to borrow one million in coin on the real estate and securities of the bank, which is in excellent condition, and if it were to go into liquidation could pay the stockholders a handsome premium after paying the deposits in full.

Inquest on Ralston.

The following were the jurors on the Ralston inquest: John R. Garniss, C. L. Miller, H. F. Williams, A. A. Cohen, R. F. Morrow, J. R. Keene, W. H. L. Barnes, S. C. L. Wadsworth and Joseph Dunkin.

The proprietor of the Neptune Bath House testified that Ralston came to take a bath at half past three; he usually came early in the morning. My son-in-law served him, but did not see him enter the water. He had no conversation with him. Two young men went in with him, and they shortly after ran in and said that something was the matter with that man; they, with my son-in-law, went out in a boat and watched for Ralston to appear at the piles, but they saw nothing of him. He was perspiring freely when he came to the bath house. My son-in-law checked him, but he said he would dry himself and take a shower before going in.

Charnce Richards, son-in-law of the last witness, testified that Ralston was smiling and cheerful when he came to the bath house; he watched on him, took charge of his clothes, and warned him against going in when heated; he said he would dry himself and take a shower. About fifteen minutes after he went in the young men told him that something was wrong with him. We pushed out in a boat, and met another boat with Ralston's body. Ralston was in the habit of swimming some distance when he bathed; he did not see him in the water.

Theo. C. Bee, assayer at Selby's smelting works, testified that the watchman on the wharf told him that a man was drowning; the body was 200 or 300 feet from the wharf in the water, face down. The head appeared to be under water. He got Clark, engineer of the steamer Bullion, lying near, to recover the body. He brought him ashore; he did not see him breathe; he used means for restoration, but saw no signs of life; he sent for a doctor, and Dr. Dew made came.

Michael J. Clark, engineer of the steamer Bullion, testified that he saw a man in the water squirming as if in a fit; he acted unnaturally, and was 200 or 300 feet distant. He went in a boat and got him in; thought he was alive when he reached him; feared he would die before reaching shore; laid him on his stomach, and poked for the alpos as quick as possible; no signs of life when he got him ashore; when he first saw him in the water he was struggling, and making for the shore.

Dr. Newmark was sworn. When he arrived he found the body on the sand apparently lifeless; he could detect no beating of the pulse or heart; he kept up artificial respiration for an hour; the appearance of the body was that of a man who had died of apoplexy; the face was livid, the eyes glassy, the pupils dilated. A sudden plunge when overheated would be apt to produce apoplexy.

Dr. Macari corroborated the testimony of the preceding witness. One of the jurors here said—"It is useless to examine any more witnesses; if we do not know now what that man died of we never shall know."

The inquest was adjourned till one p.m. on Tuesday.

The C. P. R. R. and Bank of California—Editorial on Ralston.

As far as can at present be learned concerning affairs between the Central Pacific and the Bank of California, the bank owes Stanford four hundred thousand dollars, advanced some time ago. The Central Pacific officials are disposed to be reticent, but say the company had but a small amount on deposit in the bank.

The Bulletin, this evening, has the following editorial on the death of W. C. Ralston—

"The community was more painfully surprised by the announcement of the death of W. C. Ralston yesterday afternoon than by the failure of the Bank of California, which had just preceded this tragic event. The failure of that institution was the culmination of Mr. Ralston's financial management. He had been allowed to have full swing, or so nearly so that he was responsible for the bank management, and probably for a long time past he alone knew its actual condition. When, therefore, on yesterday, after the late president had made his statement to the directors of the bank, they promptly took the further management of its affairs out of his hands, Mr. Ralston ceased to live almost simultaneously with his ceasing to be President; it was an unfortunate ending of a once powerful institution, and a tragic ending of his life. Great as were the financial abilities of Mr. Ralston, when he was advanced to the head of the bank there was an inception of that failure which culminated yesterday. Mr. Ralston had the dash, nerve and quick impulses which belong to that class of men who make brilliant speculations, and are as often overtaken by disastrous defeats. He was bold and strong-willed, which, while bordering on recklessness, was taken for financial genius. He was at the same time a man of great reach and enterprise, so that the management of a great banking institution, instead of being made an exclusive business, was only an item in the multiplicity of his affairs. Mr. Ralston engaged largely, and lost very heavily from time to time, in outside speculations. He was a heavy operator in stocks; he made a large sum in his operations in the Belcher, and probably lost a much larger one in his more recent operations in Ophir. In this last operation the losses of the pool are said to have been hardly less than three millions. Mr. R. lacked the discipline of early training. If victory did not come with a bold dash a reverse was pretty certain to follow. He could work out nothing by any patient or slow process of reasoning; he went forward with a first impulse or intuition, either to success or defeat. With a great institution at his back, the glamour of such power made him even more audacious and reckless. He could and did plan good things for private individuals, and some bad things for the public. It was only when he attempted to initiate public enterprise, in a way to make them subservient to private speculations, that the Bulletin ever made issue with Mr. Ralston. We had many long and earnest interviews with him, at the end of which he always left fully determined to carry out his own plans, but was fully informed that the Bulletin would defend public interests, putting them before private speculations, let what would happen. It was Mr. Ralston's course on questions of great public moment, involving millions of dollars of the public money, which made this criticism necessary. We have never for a moment doubted the justice of these comments, and do not doubt them to-day. Mr. Ralston's relation to these interests was one that looked to the subordination of them to private gain. He had lost heavily, and could not see why he should not be permitted to make up his losses at the public expense. If he was sometimes ready to serve the public with his great opportunity, he was also ready to demand concessions from the same public which could not be made without great and positive detriment to such interests. He thought it right to elect officers to shape the municipal and, if need be, the State government, so that his plans could more readily be executed. Whenever this was done his great energy and his autocratic ambition were put to the most dangerous use. No journal conducted in the interest of the public could hesitate for a moment as to its line of duty. We interposed only when the public measures which he had originated and was pushing to a dangerous consummation made that duty clear, and then we never hesitated to warn the public of the danger, being perfectly willing to take all the consequences that might follow. The developments of the last few days afford so complete a vindication of the Bulletin that we are not disposed to add more, when nothing from the first was wanting. If there were any reasons for a single regret, it would be in this, that our warning and criticisms had not been even more emphatic and persistent; that some greater mitigation of public evils might have been secured. This is a time for calm and dispassionate review, and we do not shrink from making it in the light of recent events. We could wish that nothing had occurred to make such review necessary, but this is our opportunity, and while we do justice to the dead, we do not forget what justice and truth also demand for the living."
