From these sources arise three-fourths of the diseases of the human race. These

THE MAN AND THE HERO. A man may be a hero in the eyes of some people, and yet in the opinion of others he may be a very contemptible object.

A newspaper correspondent, speaking of Stanley, the African explorer, compares him to a commander, with a beating gray eye, a soldierly bearing.

This excites the ire of the New York Journalist, and draws the response to the effect that Stanley is a little bit of a scrub with a hide of the color of russet, eyes with a yellow tint, and a complete and well-kept figure. This exploits are those of a bold, bright and enterprising adventurer.

The correspondent, however, was mainly upon his broad shoulders, and thus far he has said and done nothing to indicate a lack of wisdom, firmness and courage. Atlanta Constitution.

COPPER COVERED WITH CRIMSON VELVET. Heretofore, at their demise, members of the British Royal Family have been buried in coffins covered with crimson velvet, with massive silver ornaments, but, a few years ago, when the Queen made her first visit to the sepulchre, she discovered that the covering was of a cheap material, and that the coffin was not placed in new oak cases on the top of which are the plates and coronets of certain nobles. The grave of King Albany lies on a stone slab in the center of St. George Chapel vault, with King George of Hanover, George III. and the Duke of Kent. The coffins are on shelves on each side of the vault.

The Queen's coffin was never placed in the royal vault, the Queen objecting to her husband being buried, even temporarily in the same place with George IV. The task of covering all the coffins with oak cases has just been completed. New York Herald.

EVENING NEWS.

Wednesday, Jan. 21, 1885.

The Girl from Dakota.
SHE CONVINCED CHICAGOANS THAT SHE NEEDED NO ASSISTANCE.

A young woman with compact frame and a fresh complexion arrived at the Rock Island depot at Chicago, last night, the north. She got right off the train without any foolishness, and walked toward the depot, and set her big satchel down with a dull thud, and stood a moment looking around as if in uncertainty.

"Drop that," said she to the latter,
"I don't need any help. The last thing I did before leaving my farm was to carry a bag of potatoes on my shoulder to my nearest neighbor, a mile and a half away, and if I can't get around this here town with this little shopping bag, I'll go to the inferno."

She was about to go on, and her three auditors were sinking away, when a fresh young man, a hotel runner, came up, and taking in the situation at a glance, said:

"Right this way, miss. Let me help you with your baggage."

He picked up her grip and dropped the young man as she had dropped the potatoes. Then he turned to the three auditors and said:

"If you duffers were up at Grand Forks, do you know what we'd do with you? We'd organize some kind of a club and clap you in it the first thing Come and see me when I'm laying."

Chicago Herald.

An Actor Who Doesn't Swear.
"No," said a young actor who had comparisons and using many oaths in his conversation, "not all people who play are not profane. At least I know one actor who doesn't swear."

He is George C. Milne, the ex-preacher, played with the company of St. Paul.
Burleigh played Macbeth and Milne played Hamlet. When we watched went on in the caldron scene we were all fixed up in first-class style, and we did the whole thing as well as the three witches ever did it. But when it came time for the caldron to sink into the earth, the tripod stuck fast, and the old soap kettle tipped over side-wise and splashed the audience. The green fire and things all over the floor. The stage got into a blaze, somebody shouted "Fire!" and the audience began to get up.

"Hear! hear!" in the wings, swearing and shouting, and the audience around, looking mad and saying "Oh, dear!" I got to laughing and so did the other witches. Somebody turned on the gas and showed the whole thing to the audience. The audience yelled with laughter, and Burleigh swore worse than ever. But Milne didn't say a word. Then another time in the caldron scene, when the tripod stuck fast, I had on a long robe and thought I was all right. So I advanced to the front of the stage, struck an attitude and began to look as picturesque as I could. Richelle was in the middle of a long speech when some fellow in the gallery yelled out: "Get onto his robe in light-topped shoes!" That broke the audience up and spoiled the speech. But Milne didn't swear any—he only looked mad. Any other actor would have sworn under his breath for five minutes. Chicago News.

THE INAGURATION OF JEFFERSON.
Thomas Jefferson was the first President inaugurated at Washington.
The city was then a country village scattered over an immense territory, and Pennsylvania Avenue was a mere country road. There was a fence about the Capitol grounds, and it is said that Jefferson rode there on horseback and jumped from his horse and tied him to the bars while he went up to the big white building to be sworn in. He was dressed very plainly, and only a few friends accompanied him. The inauguration took place in what was then the Senate chamber—now the Supreme Court room—and only 100 people were present. Of these 100 were ladies. As the President-elect came in the senators stood up, and Aaron Burr gave the President the oath. Jefferson was John Adams, the retiring President, was not present. It is reported that he said he did not propose to grace the inauguration party appointed to him, and that he left the White House on the night of the 23d of March. He left before day he had departed from Washington forever. Exchange.

Pleasure is the business of the youth; business the pleasure of the old.

A wise man will neither speak nor do whatever anger would provoke him to.

The best heads can but misjudge in causes belonging to jurisdiction of the heart.

Oh! it is excellent to have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous to use it like a giant.

Very nice scrapies are sometimes the effect of a good mind, but often of a little one.

Nurture your minds with great thoughts, to believe in the heroic makes heroes.

From the knowledge of what you should not do, you may easily judge what you should do.

The real object of education is to give children resources that will endure as long as life endures.

A wealthy man who obtains his wealth honestly and uses it rightly, is a great blessing to the community and the best by nature.

Energy will do anything that can be done in this world; and no talents, no circumstances, no opportunities will make a man without it.

Men are instructed by reason; wise men understand by experience; the most ignorant by necessity; and the best by nature.

Credit is like a looking glass, which, when only sullied by the breath, may be wiped clear again, but if once cracked can never be repaired.

Begin your course in life with the least show and expense possible. You may at pleasure increase both, but cannot easily diminish them.

Resolve to edge in a little reading every day, if it is but a single sentence; if you gain fifteen minutes a day, it will make itself felt at the end of the year.

Nature loves truth so well that it hardly ever admits of flourishing; Conceit is to nature what nature is to beauty; it is not only needless but impairs what it would improve.

The glory of man consists not merely in looking up to what is above him, but in lifting up what is below him; the noblest and most exalted character is the one that is most helpful.

Happiness depends not so much on means and opportunities as on the candidly of the mind. And this dis-pens is so much on experience and self-control that the probability of happiness in old age is as great, to say the least, as in youth.

A well educated person who possesses a college shepherds, reads his bible, his Shakespeare and the daily papers, seldom reads more than 3,000 words in actual conversation. Accurate thinkers and close reasoners, who avoid vague and general expressions and wait till they find a word that exactly fits their meaning, employ a larger stock, and consequently speak more slowly than the average man.

Shakespeare, who displayed a greater variety of expression than probably any writer in any language, produced his plays with about 15,000 words.
Milton's works are built up with 8,000, and the Old Testament says all it has to say with the English language there are, all told, 70,000 words.

Gunpowder is evidently not disposed to be thrust from its long supremacy by the introduction of new modern requirements. The improved employed at Krupp's factory, with an equal pressure in the bore, gives a greater velocity than ordinary powder.
Its smoke is said to be less dense and to clear off more quickly. It is brown, or rather chocolate colored, the same substance spoken of in the recent of Liebig's discovery as cocoa powder. In sundry tests about one-seventh less of it was needed than of ordinary powder to produce given results. Its merit is that of beginning its combustion moderately and steady-ly, and then, when the projectile has started through the bore, burning with great rapidity. This is exactly the virtue which the soldier wants in gunpowder so that the new cocoa powder, is likely to find abundant use among military nations.
