"Starting at the Parc D'Aero station at St. Cloud at 4.15 this afternoon, the above the Bois de Boulogne in the dir-ection of the Eiffel tower, turned as obediently as a yacht answering her helm and came back to the Parc at a fair speed, following as undeviating a course as though it were marked by a visible straight line.

"There was only the faintest of breezes, it is true, but what there was of it was blowing against the baloon. This was, however, so unmistakably independent of any air current favorable or unfavorable, that the spectators seemed to awake to a full appreciation of M. Santos-Dumont's triumphant solution of the problem of aerial naviga-tion, and greeted him upon his return with a hearty burst of applause. No public announcement had been made of the ascension, so the crowd was not so great as on Friday. "Just before starting there occurred a little incident that somewhat disturbed M. Santos-Dumont's equananimity, Just as he was about to leave, the prize committee "reminded" him that the starting time would be taken at the exact instant his guide rope left the ground, and the moment of his return would be the instant his balloon came to earth again. To this latter detail, M. Santos-Dumont objected flatly. He claimed, very logically, that the end of the voyage was the moment arrived over the starting point. Not only does there seem to be common sense in his contention, but it is also in accordance with both the letter and pirit of the conditions laid down for the Prix de L'Aero Club contest.
