town of this size, including transportation, food, clothing, and so on. "I don't know how I could do it," said one of the men, "but I will try." The men were given a list of supplies and a map of the area. They were also given a small boat and a few tools. The men set out on their journey, and after a long and difficult trip, they reached the town of this size. They found that the town was in a very good location, and they decided to stay there. They built a small settlement, and the men who had been with them joined them. The town grew, and the men who had been with them became the leaders of the town. The town was named after the men who had been with them, and it became a very important town in the area.

On this day the street of Baghdad was a kaleidoscope of color, with the following described from a picture of JAHN, superintendent of a public school and vice high school, who said that the streets were full of people and that the people were very happy. The picture shows a large crowd of people, many of whom are wearing traditional Iraqi clothing. The scene is set in a city street, with buildings visible in the background. The overall atmosphere is one of celebration and joy.
