had a "package" for the seniors who come into their glory today, with concluding festivities at the theater tohight. It is not probable, however, that jall where he now languishes in a cell, they will outdo the juniors in the matter of "stirring things," for the big theater, which was packed downstairs and in the first two circles, rang with applause time after time, and applause that was fully merited by the elever performance. The crowd was clever performance. The crowd was typically a High school one. In the au-dience groups of alumni gave the class yells of the days they were in school, and discussed during intermissions junior day celebrations of years gone by. The red and black colors were everywhere, even in the costumes of the players. The feature of the farce which went under the title of "An Exhibition of Wit and Wisdom," was the drills and n ixed chorus work. The best of these was an athletic drill of a group of boys and girls, attired in white and wearing blue necktles. The girls carried tennis racquets and the boys golf clubs. This, the cadet drill, and the "Aunt Marchorus were the special hits of the program.

The senior rehearsal was a clever burlesque of numbers of the gradu-ating class, both men and women, and from the applause which greeted the act, those acquainted with the circumact, those acquainted with the circum-stances must have considered it es-pecially clever. In this act a plot was hatched to do away with the junior class president, and to thus spread dis-order in the ranks of the juniors. In the next scene it is folled, and in the final scene Sherlock Holmes comes to the sected flores the shulls of the final scene Sherleck Holmes comes to the rescue, finding the skulls of the seniors in a grave yard. His deduc-tions and conclusions in identifying the skulls were clever bits of satire that provoked applause and laughter. Several musical features were inter-spersed, among them being a violin solo by Marie Regewski, and a vocal solo by Marie Berkhozi, both of which were hearting encoded.
