

THE EVENING NEWS.

Wednesday, May 17, 1872.

PRICE OF GOLD.

Published Daily by HOOVER, ELDRIDGE & CO.,
Bankers.
SALT LAKE CITY, May 17, 1872.
Buying at $1.00; Selling at $1.11.

LOCAL AND OTHER MATTERS.

MATRICAL.—Uncle Tom's cabin is the hall for to-night. This is a universally popular drama, and one to which the company can do good justice. It will be played with a strong cast.

RETIRERS.—We were much gratified this morning at receiving a call from Elders Eli Bell and Caleb Ward, who, with their families, arrived last evening from their mission to the Sandwich Islands. These Elders were called to go on this mission at the Spring Conference of 1865, and six years ago to-day started. They have had a hard time in which they have been absent, and have enjoyed their labors. Their home has been on the plantation of Eli, though Elder Bell has occasionally traveled as a missionary on the other islands. They left Honolulu on the 1st of January, and Eli Bell is accompanied by his wife and three children, and Elder Ward by his wife and six children. Though they have been absent so long a period, they say the time has passed off very quickly. They are now in a condition scarcely realizable that six years have intervened since they left their homes for the islands. The Elders and their families at Lai were in good health when these Elders left there.

UTAH COUNTY.—Bishop D. H. Holliday, of Santquin, called to-day. He tells us that the general crops are all in the ground. The "hoppers had made their appearance and up to the time he left, Saturday morning, they had taken five acres of wheat. The health of the people was good.

PLANTING ORCHARDS.—Not long since we stated in the News that in planting out an orchard that it was not necessary to select for the purpose very young trees, and alluding to an instance of a gentleman, at Keyward, having planted a number of well-matured fruit trees, and which continued to bear, apparently without having received any material damage through being transplanted. The same experiment has been tried the present season by a gentleman in the north-western portion of the territory, even with the apricot, which is considered a delicate tree, with the same result. It seems to require the more mature trees, and the more like the soil and environment when transplanted; but the question is which loss would be the greater—that of waiting several years for trees to mature and bear, or to plant out large trees and lose time what is lost by way of injury in transplanting. The plan might be beneficial in some instances, and would facilitate the progress of beautifying many portions of the territory and obtaining bearing orchards quickly.

MINE HOUR.—C. Little—Our well-known and highly respected fellow-townsman, Col. J. C. Little, will henceforth, we doubt, gain wealth, fame and good will, as Mine Host of the American Hotel, situated a block east of the Theatre and half that distance from the City Hall, at the corner of First South and Second East Sts. The Colonel has had his private residence re-arranged and filled up internally in an elegant style, as an hotel, everything, even to such articles as being so ordered as to contribute to the grandeur and convenience of his guests. The premises are by no means as extensive as some others in the city, but the Colonel is not at particular as to the number due to the quality of his guests, and he is aiming to make the American Hotel an elegant resort for those who, while compelled to reside at an hotel, desire the very best the market affords in the way of food and accommodation, and also the most comfortable place to be obtained in larger establishments.

The Colonel is a man famed for his politeness and urbanity, and has had considerable experience in former years in the business of a new one to run. We trust that he promises a highly combination of the facilities necessary for a successful hotel keeper, and that owing to this he will henceforth constantly command, all he can possibly desire, a large and varied class of visitors to Salt Lake City. His hotel is within a very short distance of the main business street, in a quiet and very respectable portion of the city, and we trust prospects are favorable for, and we wish the Colonel every success in his new venture.

MILLARD COUNTY.—J. B. Weston, writing from Seipio, on the 14th inst., says: Our crops look excellent and promising for a plentiful harvest. The hoppers have put in an appearance, but by united effort we hope to stem the progress of their ravages. Our Co-operative store is a thriving, paying institution. General good health and peace prevail in our settlement.

GOOD LAYER.—Brother Williams, of the Fourth Ward, informs us that he has a common hen which lately laid fifteen eggs in as many days successively, and that the eggs were very large, the combined weight of three of them being eleven and a half ounces.

MR. HARRIS' BENEFIT.—On Friday night Mr. W. T. Harris, the stage manager at the Theatre, will take a benefit. Mr. Harris is well and favorably known to the public, and we think him worthy of their support. It is indeed that so much influence in theatrical management as to be successfully combined in one individual as is displayed by this gentleman. He is a very fair actor, and his impersonations are not confined to one particular, although more adapted to low comedy than the other. In this connection it may not be amiss to mention the very excellent playing of himself and Mr. F. Margate, the latter as often as the former as "Smasher." In "Our Cousin" Germany, the two women appeared the very essence of the characters they represented. The walk movements and manner of speech of both, resembling one of hundreds of a certain class of the East. Mr. Harris is invariably well up in his parts, and there are but few men of his age who are so well acquainted with the stage business as he. His efforts to stage management to carry on the public interests, have been for the public welfare, and we trust that he will be greatly rewarded by a bumper house on Friday night.

DISBURSE COUP.—The following communication was handed in this afternoon:

SALT LAKE CITY, May 17, 1872.
Editor Deseret News.—The Honorable Judge McLean, to day, admitted and allowed the suit and cause of action between Mr. Wirtson, who has resided here seven years, and who had witness to testify to his moral character, did not succeed so well owing to a great extent to his imperfect knowledge of the English language. The Judge acquited, in a cause of action, which was brought by Mr. Wirtson and his wife, against Mr. Wirtson and another, and who many of them were living in the same house, and also whether Mr. Wirtson left "the town of Maryland" because he preferred the free American institutions and laws, etc., in which opinion Mr. Wirtson gave satisfactory answer. Then came the question about the law of '62 here, where Mr. Wirtson became more obscure. He knew it, and the Judge put the question in several ways. Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He however, and the Judge put the question in several ways, and Mr. Wirtson's language became more idiomatic, and his Honor preached him a good sermon telling him that he himself was an American, and was as such bound to obey the laws of the United States, "here," he said, "is an offence which the law does not make criminal and indictable." He