FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

PARIS, 1.—The funeral services to-day over the remains of several clerical victims of the Commune, were solemn and impressive. Notre Dame was grandly arrayed. The central object, in solemn pomp and circumstance, containing the remains of the Archbishop, surrounded by minor structures bearing the crosses of Duguesery, the cure of Meudon, Grand vicar of the diocese of Beccourt and Sebastian. The coffin of the Archbishop was covered with a pall of black velvet, embroidered and encased with a massive silver casket. A thousand papers were burning in silver candelabras, and the incense vessels were also silver. The floor was covered with black cloth and the pews were covered with black cloth. The altar was draped with black and silver. The transepts, 150 feet wide, appeared like huge recesses; black drapery covered every statue, except those of the Virgin and Child, and the first Bishop of Paris. In the midst of all were the black and charred remains of the Bishop's chair, from which the Communists endeavored to burn the cathedral. It was to be left intact as a memento of crime. Along the route of the procession, the windows and streets were crammed with spectators. The streets were lined with black and silver. A strong force of regulars, with reversed guns and snuffed drums, were in the procession. The funeral cortege was covered with black and silver and was drawn by six horses. Another beautiful car, containing the remains of Suret, followed. The procession reached the cathedral at 11 o'clock.

Inside the church was crowded with members of the Assembly, priests and sisters of charity. At 11 o'clock the points descended with military music, left the church, and proceeded to the great doors, which were draped in black, to meet the coffin. Chanting was then commenced; outside was heard the beating of drums, the pealing of trumpets and the roaring of cannon, and the services were long and solemn. The funeral was terminated at 12 o'clock. It is said Rouel and Courbet have been unseated in Paris.

The Official Journal ascribes the insurrection to Napoleon's congregation of the hundred thousand workmen in Paris.

appeared grateful and satisfied with the proceedings.
The trial proceeded socially, and the tender-hearted jury brought in a verdict of guilty of manslaughter in the first degree. A look of anxiety, which the stranger had worn up to this time faded from his face as he stood up to receive his sentence. "You have been found guilty," said the judge, "of the crime of manslaughter, for which you are undoubtedly penitent." Here the stranger again began to get anxious and uneasy.

"And if," proceeded the Judge, "it meets with your approbation we will try to hang you next Sunday morning, at 11 o'clock a. m.; in the meantime, try to make yourself as comfortable as possible."

The stranger looked a little sad, and the Judge asked him if he wasn't satisfied if there was anything he could do for him.

"Judge, I hate to be particular and fussy," said the stranger, "but having the heart of a tiger, the whole score of 10 o'clock in the morning, as if you could have me swung off before that, I should feel obliged."

"Of course," said the Judge, "we always respect a party's feelings. No trouble at all. Come round at 9 o'clock, and may be we'll get through before church time."

"Sunday morning at 9 o'clock the stranger came out of the hotel and proceeded to the grocery. There he met a denigration of citizens, one of whom threw a larful over the limit of a tree, and, as soon as the stranger had taken a chew of tobacco and shaken hands all round, they hauled him up.
