

CAPTAIN DREYFUS AS HE LIVES NOW

It is safe to say that the central figure of the Dreyfus affair, Dreyfus himself, is the most magnetic of men, or rather, has fewer friends and admirers in his triumph than he had in his distress. He has failed to win over his antagonists, but he has won the sympathy of the world. He has continued to live in the same quiet, unassuming way, and he has continued to get himself disliked by nearly all his former champions, who typical of the "his innocence is his principal virtue." For fully two years after his pardon Dreyfus was in a highly nervous state, and often in the night under the impression that he was still on the "Dreadnaught," and to rid himself of the hideous nightmare was wont to go on and pass the floor. He passed the winter and spring of 1907 with his elder sister at Villeneuve, close of Carpentras, in the south of France, and finished his course in Switzerland, near Geneva, justly dissatisfied with the law of reparation of 1906, which accorded him less than he would have obtained in the natural course of events, and which rendered it impossible for him ever to attain the highest grades in the army. He is now living with his family in a small apartment house of the Boulevard Malesherbes, which differs in no essential respect from a hundred other apartment houses in the same district. Never having recognized that his voice was a political one, he remains perfectly neutral in "party politics." He is neither an anti-militarist nor a radical anti-militarist. He is the least of the "Dreyfusards"—a fact which the majority of his ex-champions can neither understand nor forgive. He limits his social relations mainly to his kindred and intimate friends. He appears rarely in public, but makes it a point of honor to attend the ceremonies which commemorate the important incidents of his life. Fired at, on the occasion of his last public appearance (the "Festivities of 1907"), he received a wound in the right arm, which he has not yet recovered from. He is a really serious, but not a really serious, man. He has done nothing to make himself disliked by his former champions, but he has done nothing to make himself liked by them.

"I treasure in my mind a dream which took the form of a fantastic palace with grotesque towers, sculpture, etc., and it was my dream to build it myself." The image of this dream palace, which he has been carrying in his mind for years, is the image of a palace in the department of Drome. Twenty-six years ago he began building his dream palace, and he has been at it ever since, until recently, when he stopped only because he had finished the palace. Every stone that went into it was picked up by himself, every stone was laid by him. The design was conceived in his own mind as he went on, and was carried out according to the extraordinary plan that he had imagined. Now that the palace is finished it looks like a petrified dream, in which the right-hand side of a certain part. It is a fantastic, nondescript, combining all architectural styles, and adorned with stone carvatures which would defy the classification of a naturalist. In putting this stone phantasmagoria together Dreyfus used a sack of cement. This palace has a subterranean passage in which rudely sculptured elephants and imaginary monsters stand guard. In the very center of the palace is a tomb, where Dreyfus expects some day to lie. This is the most elaborately carved bit of the whole house.

Three of this great fair will be highly amusing, donkey races and pig races. Then, in the afternoon, of the children, this race was added. Competition in these two contests will be open to citizens of the county only.

A STRANGE PALACE.

The strangest looking building ever put up by man is probably the palace which a French man called has erected for his own pleasure. For in long years, the owner of this house says,

NOT OPEN TO EVERYBODY.

A most peculiar effect was produced by an announcement in the advertisement of a county fair to be held in our state, says Congressman Champ Clark. Among other things, the announcement said that attractive fea-

Monday begins our week's annual housecleaning of remaining winter merchandise. Every department contributes.

Our After Inventory January Discount Sale.

Some stores in clearing goods for another season's selling campaign get out their moth balls and tar paper and pack merchandise, moth-balls, tar-paper and all into the store rooms until Spring and Summer is over and cold weather pokes its nose over the threshold—Not so with us—We just simply sharpen the blue pencil and mark prices way, way down and announce our after—Inventory January discount sale.
