"STRAIGHT" POLITICS.

There was a meeting in the old Federal court room last evening of a number of gentlemen who style themselves "Straight Democrats." They had a grievance which they are seeking to remove in a movement apart from that of the convention of Monday. They claim that this was not satisfactory in that it failed to put up a ticket or take any other definite action, and this being the case, the party as a whole has nothing to support, no principles to maintain and no leaders to follow.

As the News looked at it, the other convention took such action as was the logical sequence of the multiplicity of present conditions that it, regarding the means by which the situation is to be relieved, as a last resort rather than a political proposition, the delegates decided to do with it as such, each acting in his individual capacity as a man of business concerned in the welfare of the municipality. Looking at it in this manner, to have nominated a party ticket, whereby strength that they think should be centered against those responsible for the deplorable condition would be considered and its power for good completely dissipated, would have been manifestly improper, so that, in this view of the case, they did the best, if not the only proper thing they could do.

It was heartily to be wished that our citizens to the present emergency at least would be less disposed to resort to partisanship and take a more general concern in the welfare of the whole people. Not that party organization is to be desired or its being brought to bear upon political questions. But surely the purification and redemption of the city are matters concerning which Democrats, Republicans and Liberals ought to be able to see eye to eye. Straight politics just now would accordingly seem to mean aid and encouragement to the common enemy.

EXPANDING AND COLONIZING.

Attached to California and stretching out eastward into the Pacific ocean for a distance of some 600 miles opposite the mainland of Mexico is what is known as Lower California. The water separating it from Mexico is called the Gulf of California and it is from ten to 100 miles wide, the tongue of land spoken of being about the same. On it are various towns of varying consequence and the entire tract has for many years been an object of quiet interest. We are now advised that one Wm. A. Woodson of London, who has lately been visiting the lower part of the state, is reported to have said that arrangements had been made, completed for the purchase of Lower California, and that he represented a syndicate composed of English and American capitalists backing the scheme. According to the story told by Woodson, he is to go to the Mexican government for the territory which would then be annexed to the United States. This is pronounced a very old story, this talk of purchasing Lower California. It would, the Oregonian thinks, be interesting to know just what capitalists of this particular class of financial stragglers had found California ready for such a transaction as the one mentioned. That is, that a parcel of land in the lower part of a Mexican land grant in Lower California, it is thought, may have been intended to do with the story. This land grant is situated near the coast and contains between 20,000 and 30,000 acres.
