a poetical form by Elder Lyon. Calista! Thou wert dear to me Ere life's short sand was run; And dearer now thou seem'st to be. Than aught beneath the sun. Though now thy spirit gloriously, Is robed in purer light. Where life can never feel decay, Nor death's alarm afright. Yet still affection holds thee dear, And fondly would have kept thee here; And as I watched thy life's scenes fade With anxious throbbing heart; And marked thy brightning eye that said, Farewell! we soon must part. No grief such as the world feel, Dispondingly were given; I knew thou wouldst go to sea ! And this life's prigrimage be new-To be my guardian angel here: Meek spirit of the just, That ever felt the healing balm Of faith's confiding trust. The seraph voice of melody, To angels only given, That makes all time a holiday, And this dull earth a heaven. Say, who would not forgive the tent That loved affection still revered Tis hard to bear femorses frown, And grief unable to atone For folly's mapent years. But ah! Calista, none of these Give cause for one regret; I only mourn that death should seize Thee, ere we hardly met.
