

MISS MAY MCATEE

GIRL "REFORMS" DRINKING FATHER BY SHOOTING HIM.

One of the most unique legal trials of recent times promises to be that of Miss May McAttee who deliberately shot her aged father, the Rev. John Q. McAttee in Philadelphia, last week. The shooting is said to have been the result of an attack which Dr. McAttee, while under the influence of liquor, made upon his wife. The clergyman, who is recovering, has promised to reform. Miss McAttee is now out on bail.

Railway Accidents in Great Britain
Lead to Demand for Caution

THE two recent serious railway casualties in the United Kingdom have led to a general demand for greater caution in the operation of trains, the use of additional safeguards and the imposition of severer penalties for carelessness and negligence.

In view of the number of passengers carried, however, the railway casualties in Great Britain are surprisingly small. This is owing, in part, at least, to the almost uniform absence of grade crossings in cities, the better protection of highway crossings in the country, the use of tunnels and bridges at railway stations to reach the tracks, and well-ballasted tracks on the main lines as well as on the great trunk lines. The board of trade statistics for Great Britain for the year 1905 show that 1,099 persons were killed, and 4,459 persons injured by accidents resulting from the operation of trains or the movement of railway vehicles. There is a decrease of 30 in the number of deaths, and of 192 in the number of accidents, in comparison with the average for the preceding nine years. Four collisions and derailments caused all but one of the 39 deaths of passengers due to train accidents.

The number of passengers killed is greater than in any year since 1889, while the number of those injured is far below the average for many years past. Fewer passengers were killed and more injured in 1905 than usual by the movement of trains and railway vehicles, as distinguished from train accidents. These casualties, it is claimed, were largely due to the carelessness of passengers rather than to the negligence of railway employees. It is gratifying to learn that there was a marked diminution in the number of accidents to railway servants caused by moving trains and railway vehicles being only 1 in 31 exposed to danger, as against an average of 1 to 70 exposed to danger for the preceding nine years. The percentage of accidents among employees due to misadventure is given as 57 per cent, while the casualties attributed to want of caution or misconduct amounted to 32 per cent.

The accidents occurring on railway premises but not in any way connected with the operation of railway trains resulted in 81 deaths and the injury of 11,777 persons, as compared with an average of 88 deaths and 11,418 injuries for the preceding nine years. These casualties arose mainly from misadventure or pure accident, and could not probably have been anticipated or provided against, and no remedy is suggested to prevent their recurrence. The average number of collisions and derailments in Great Britain for the 25 years up to 1905 was 217. The number fell in 1905 to 193. A collision or derailment occurred in the 25 years referred to on the average for every 1,508,521 train miles run, but in 1905 it only occurred for every 2,014,689 train miles run.

showing a gain of nearly 34 per cent for last year. This improvement is stated to be owing to the use of continuous brakes and to unusual care and circumspection in the operation of trains. There was a noticeable reduction in the number of railway servants killed and injured in connection with the running of trains in 1905 as compared with the average for the preceding 31 years. That average was 14 employees killed and 138 injured, as against six employees killed and 112 injured in 1905, although there was a large increase last year in the number of employees exposed to risk.

The average for 31 years ending with 1904 was one passenger killed to 24,464,832 passengers carried, and one injured to 3,023,995 passengers carried.
